seke the God of his father Dauid: and in the twolueth yeare begane he to clense luda and Ierusale from the hye places and groues, and carued Idols, and molten ymages: and caused the altares of Baalim to be broken downe before him, and the ymages that were theron, hewed he downe. And y groues and carued Idols and molté ymages brake he in peces, and made them to dust, and scatred it vpon the graues of them that had offred vnto them. And the bones of the prestes brent he vpo the altares, and so clēsed he Iuda a Ierusale, đ in ý cities of Manasses, Ephraim, Simeon, and vito Nephtali in their wyldernesses on enery syde. And whà he had broken downe the altares and groues, and smytten the Idols in peces, and hewed downe all the ymages in all the londe of Israel, he came agayne to lerusalem.

In the eightēth yeare of his reigne ${ }^{b}$ whan he had clensed the londe and the house, he sent Saphan the sonne of Asalia and Maeseia the Shreue of the cite, and loath the sonne of Ioahas the Chaunceler, to repayre the house of the LORDE his God. And they came to Helchias $\mathfrak{y}$ hye prest, and there was delyuered vnto them the money that was broughte unto the house of God, which the Leuites (that kepte the threshouldes) had gathered, of Manasses, Epraim, and of all the residue in Israel, and of all Iuda a Ben Iamin, and of them that dwelt at lerusale, and they delyuered it vnto the haddes of the worke men in the house of the LORDE, and gaue it vito those that wrought in the house of the LORDE, where it was in decaye, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they shulde repayre it. And the same gaue it forth vnto the earpenters and buylders, to bye fre stone and hewen tymber for the balkes in the houses, which the kynges had destroyed. And the men laboured faithfully in the worke.

And oner them were ordeyned, lahath and Obadia the Leuites of the children of Merari: Zachary and Mesullam of the children of the Kahathites, to further the worke, and they were all Leuites that coulde playe vpon instrumentes. But ouer them that bare burthens and furthured all maner of worke in all the offices, there were scrybes, officers and dore kepers of the Leuites. And whā they toke out the money that was broughte vnto y house of the LORDE, Helchias the prest founde the boke of the lawe of the LORDE geuen by Moses. And Helchias answered, and saide vito Saphan the Scrybe: ${ }^{*}$ I haue founde the boke of the lawe in $\mathfrak{y}$ house of $\dot{y}$ LORDE. And Helchias delyuered the boke vito Saphan. And Saphan bare it vnto the kynge, and broughte $\hat{y}$ kynge worde agayne, and sayde: All that was geuen vuder the handes of thy seruauntes, that make they: and $\dot{y}$ money that was founde in $\hat{y}$ house of the LORDE, haue they gathered together, and delyuered it vito $\mathfrak{y}$ officers, and to the workmen. And Saphan the Scrybe tolde the kynge, and sayde: Helchias the prest hath delyuered me a boke.

And Saphan red therin before the kynge. And whan the kynge herde the wordes of the lawe, he rente his clothes. And the kynge commaunded Helchias and Ahicam the sonne of Saphan, and Abdon the sonne of Micha, and Saphan the Scrybe, and Asaia the kynges sernaunt, and sayde: Go youre waye, axe councell at the LORDE for me and for the remnaunt in Israel, and for Iuda, concernynge these wordes of the boke that is founde. For greate is the indignacion of the LORDE that is gone forth ouer vs, because oure fathers haue not kepte the worde of the LORDE, to do acordinge as it is wrytten in this boke. Then wete Helchias (with the other that were sent from the kynge) vnto the prophetisse Hulda the wife of Sallum the Sonne of Thecoath the sonne of Hasra the keper of the clothes, which dwelt at Ierusalem in the secōde parte, and they spake this vnto her.

And she sayde vnto them: Thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: Tell the man $\frac{t}{y}$ sent you vnto me: Thus sayeth ẙ LORDE: Beholde, I wil brynge plages vpō this place and the inhabiters therof, eue all the curses which are wrytten in the boke, that was red before the kynge of Iuda: because they haue forsakē me, and brêt incēse vnto other goddes, to prouoke me with all the workes of their handes. And my indignacion shal go forth rpon this cite, and shal not be quenched.
And after this maner shal ye saye rnto the kynge of Iuda, that sent you to axe councell at the LORDE: Thus sayeth y LORDE God of Israel concernynge the wordes that thou hast herde: Because thine hert is moued, and because thou hast humbled thy selfe in the sighte of God, whan thou herdest his [^363]wordes agaynst this place and the inbabiters therof, and hast submytted thy selfe before me, and rent thy clothes, and wepte before me, therfore haue 1 herde the, sayeth $y$ LORDE. Beholde, I wil gather the winto thy fathers, and thou shalt be layed in thy graue with peace, so $\frac{t}{t}$ thine eyes shal not se all the euell that I wyl brynge ouer this place, and the indwellers therof. And they broughte the kynge worde agayne.

Then sent $\stackrel{\dot{\mathrm{y}}}{ }$ kynge, ${ }^{a}$ and caused all the Elders in Iuda and Ierusalem to come together. And the kynge wente rp in to the house of the LORDE, and all the men of Iuda and inhabiters of Ierusalē, the prestes, the Leuites, and all the people both small and greate: and all the wordes in the boke of the conenaunt that was founde in the house of the LORDE, were red in their eares. And $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge stode in his place, and made a couenaunt before the LORDE, that they shulde walke after the LORDE, to kepe his cōmaundementes, his testimonies, and his statutes with all their hert and with all their soule, to do acordinge vnto all the wordes of the conenaunt that are wrytten in this boke.
And there stode all they that were founde at Ierusalem and in Ben Iamin. And $\dot{y}$ inhabiters of Ierusalem dyd acordinge to the couenaunt of God the God of their fathers. And Iosias put awaye all abhominacions out of all the londes that were the children of Israes, and caused all them that were founde in lsrael, to serue the LORDE their God. ${ }^{+}$As longe as losias lyued, departed they not from the LORDE the God of their fathers.

AND losias kepte Passeouer ${ }^{b}$ vnto the LORDE at lerusalem, and slewe the Passeouer on the fourtenth daye off the first moneth, and set the prestes in their offices, and strengthed them to their mynistracion in the house of the LORDE. and sayde vnto the Leuites that taughte in all Israel, and were sanctified vito $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE: Put the holy Arke in the house that Salomon $\dot{y}$ sonne of Dauid kynge of lsrael dyd buyide. $\ddagger$ Ye shal beare it nomore spon youre shulders. Se that ye serue now the LORDE youre God, and his people of Israel, and prepare the house of youre fathers in youre courses, as it was appoynted by Dauid the kynge of Israel, and by Salomo his sonne: and stonde in the Sinctuary after $\hat{y}$ course of the fathers houses amonge youre brethren the children of the people, And after the course of the fathers houses amonge the Leuites, and kyll Passeouer, sanctifye and prepare youre brethren, that they mave do acordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.

And Iosias gaue lambes and yonge kyddes which were males, to the Heueofferynge for the comontye (all to the lasseouer for euery one that was founde) in the nombre thirtye thonsande, and thre thousande oxen, all of the kynges good. And his prynces of their awne good wyll gaue to the Heueofferynge for the people, i for the prestes and Leuites (namely, Helchias, Zachary and Iehiel the prynces in ${ }_{i}$ house of God amoge the prestes) for the Passeouer, two thousande and sixe hundreth, And thre hūdreth oxen. But Chanania, Semaia, Nathancel and his brethren, Gasabia, Ieiel and Iosabad the chefe of the Leuites gaue the Leuites to the Heue offerynge for the Passeouer, fyue thousande shepe, a fyue hundreth oxen.

Thus was the Gods seruyce prepared, and the prestes stode in their place, and the Leuites in their courses acordinge to the kynges commandement. And they kylled the Passeouer, and the prestes toke it off their handes, and sprenkled it: and the Leuites toke the skynnes off them, and remoued the burntofferynge there from, to geue it amonge the porcions of the fathers houses in the multitudes of their congregacion to offre vnto the LORDE, * as it is wrytten in y boke of Moses, Euen so dyd they with the oxen also. And they dighte the Passcoucr at the fyre + acordinge to the lawe. And that which was halowed, dighte they in pottes, kettels, and pannes, and made haist for the comon people. Afterwarde prepared they for them selues also and for $\dot{y}$ prestes: for the prestes the children of Aaron were occupied in the burntofferynges and fat vntyll the nighte. Therfore must the Leuites prepare for them selues and for the prestes the children of Aaron.

And the syngers the children of Asaph stode in their place (acordinge to $\ddagger$ Dauids commaundement) and Asaph and Heman, and Iedithim the kynges Seer, and the porters

[^364]at all the gates. And they departed not from their office. For the Leuites their brethren prepared for them. Thus was all the Gods seruyce prepared the same daye, that the Passeouer mighte be kepte, and the burntsacrifices offred vpou the altare off the LORDE acordinge to the commaundement of kynge Iosias.

So the children of Israel that were at hande, helde Passeouer at that tyme, and the feast of vnleuended bred, seuen dayes. Sence ẙ tyme of Samuel the prophet, was no Passeouer kepte in Israel like this: and no kynge of Israel had holdē soch a Passeouer as Iosias dyd, and the prestes, Leuites, all Iuda, and soch as were founde of Israel, and the inhabiters of lerusalem. In the eightēth yeare of the reigne of Iosias was this Passeouer kepte.

After this, whan losias had prepared the house, Necho the kynge of Egipte wente vp to fighte agaynst Carcamis besyde Euphrates. And Iosias wēte forth agaynst him. But he sent messaungers into him, sayenge: What haue I to do with the O kynge off Iuda? I am not come now agaynst the, but I fighte agaynst another house: and God hath sayde, that I shal make haist. Ceasse from God which is with me, that he destroye the not. Neuertheles losias turned not his face from him, but prepared himselfe to fighte with him, and herkened not into the wordes of Necho out of the mouth of God, a came to fighte with him vpon the playne besyde Mageddo. But the Archers shot at kynge Iosias. And the kynge sayde vnto his seruauntes: Cary me awaye, for I am sore wounded. And his seruantes toke him from the charet, and caried him rpon his seconde charet, and broughte him to Ierusalem. And he dyed, and was buried amonge the sepulcres off his fathers.

And All Iuda and Ierusalem mourned for Iosias, and Ieremy bewayled losias, and all the synginge men and wemen, spake their lamétacions ouer Iosias vnto this daye, and made a custome therof rnto this daye. Beholde, it is wrytten also amonge the Lamentacions. What more there is to saye of losias, and his mercy acordinge to the scripture in the lawe of the LORDE, and of his actes (both first and last) beholde, it is wrytten in the boke of the kynges of Israel and Iuda.

 ND the people of the londe ${ }^{a}$ toke Ioahas the somne of Iosias, and made him kynge in his fathers steade at Ierusalem. Thre and twentye yeare olde was loahas whan he was made kynge, and reigned thre monethes at Ierusalem. For the kynge of Egipte deposed him at Ierusalem, and condemned the londe in an hundreth talentes of syluer, and one talent off golde. And the kynge of Egipte made Eliachim his brother kynge ouer luda and lerusale, and turned his name loaehim. But Neeho toke his brother Ioahas, and earied him in to Egipte.Fyue and twentye yeare olde was loachim whā he was made kyige, and reigned eleue yeare at Ierusale, and dyd that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE his God. * And Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon wente up agaynst him, and bounde him with eheynes, to eary him vnto Babilon. And Nabuchodonosor broughte eertayne vessels of $\dot{y}$ house of the LORDE vito Babilon, and put them in his temple at Babilon. What more there is to saye of Ioachim, and off his abhominacions which he dyd, and that were founde in him, beholde, they are wrytten in the boke of the kynges of Israel and Iuda. + And the LORDE God of their fathers $\mathbb{C}$ sent vato them early by his messanngers (for he spared his people and his habitacion) but they laughed the messaungers of God to scorne, and despysed his wordes, and had his prophetes in derision, so loge tyll the indignacion of the LORDE increased ouer his people, and there was no remedye of healinge. $\ddagger$ For he broughte the kynge of the Caldees vpon them, and caused for to slaye all their yonge men with the swerde in the house of their Sanctuary, and spared nether yonge mā ner virgin, nether aged ner graūd father, but gave them all in to his hande. And all the vessels in the house of God, greate and small, the treasures in the house of y LORDE, and the treasures of the kyige and of his prynces, all this eaused he to be caried vnto Babilon. And they brent the house of God, and brake downe the wall of Ierusale, and all the palaces therof brent they with fyre, so that all the costly ornamentes of it were destroyed.

${ }^{9}$ B UT whan the aduersaries of Iuda and Ben Iamin herde, that the children of the captiuyte buylded the teple vnto the LORDE God of Israel, they came to Zorobabel a to the pryncipall fathers, and sayde moto them: We wyl buylde with you: for we seke the LORDE youre God like as ye do. And we have done sacrifice vnto him, isence the tyme that Assar Hadon the kynge of Assur broughte vs up hither. But Zorobabel and lesua and the other awnciēt fathers of Israel, answered them: It is not mete for vs and you to buylde the house of oure God, but we wyl buylde alone vito the LORDE God of Israel, $\ddagger$ as Cyrus the kynge of Persia hath commaunded vs.

Then the folke of the londe hyndered the people of Iuda, and made them afrayed to buylde, and hyred councelers aganst them and hyndered their deuyce, as longe as Cyrus the kynge of Persia lyued, vntyll the reigne off Darius kynge off Persia. But whan Ahasuerus was kynge, in the begynnynge off [^371]his reigne wrote they vnto him a complaynte agaynst them of Iuda and Ierusalem.

And in the tyme of Artaxerses, wrote Bisellam, Mithridath, Tabeel and the other of their councell vito Artaxerses the kynge of Persia. But the scripture of $\frac{f}{y}$ letter was wrytten in the Syrians speach, and was interpretated in the langage of the Syrians. Rehum $\dot{y}$ chaunceler, and Simsai the scrybe, wrote this letter agaynst Ierusalem to Artaxerses the kynge.

We Rehum the chaunceler, and Simsai the scribe, and other of the councell of Dina, off Arphasath, off Tarplat, off Persia, off Arach, of Babilon, of Susan, of Deha, and of Elam, and other of the people $\$$ whom the greate and noble Asnaphar broughte ouer, and set in the cities of Samaria, and other on this syde the water, and in Canaan. And this is $\dot{y}$ summe of the letter that they sent vnto kynge Artaxerses:

Thy seruauntes the men on this syde the water and in Canaan. Be it knowne vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge, that the Iewes which are come yp from the to rs vnto lerusale in to that sedicious a wicked cite, buylde the same, and make vp $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{g}}$ walles of it, $\mathbb{i}$ brynge it out of $\mathfrak{y}$ foundacion. Be it knowne now therfore vnto $\frac{f}{y}$ kynge, $\frac{t}{y}$ yf this cite be buylded a the walles made vp agayne, the shal not they geue tribute, toll, and yearly custome, and their denyce shal do y kynge harme. But now that we all are therby which destroyed the temple, we wolde no longer se the kynges dishonoure. Therfore sent we out, and caused the kynge to be certified therof: That it maye be soughte in $\dot{y}$ Cronicles of thy progenitours, and so shalt thou fynde in the same Cronicles, and perceaue, that this cite is sedicious and noysome vnto kynges and londes, and that they cause other also to rebell of olde, and for the same cause was this cite destroyed. Therfore do we certifie the kynge, that yf this cite be buylded, and the walles therof made vp, thou shalt kepe nothinge on this syde the water by the reason of it.

Then sent $\dot{f}$ kynge an answere vito Rehum 3 I the chaunceler, and Simsai the Scrybe, and to the other of their councell that dwelt in Samaria, and vito the other beyonde yiter. Peace and salutacion. The letter which ye sent vnto vs, hath bene opēly red before me, and I haue commaunded to make search: and it is founde, that this cite of olde hath made insurreccion agaynst kynges, thow ${ }^{t}$ vproure and rebellion hath bene commytted therin. There haue bene mightie kynges also at Ierusale, which haue reigned ouer all that is beyoude the water, and toll, tribute and yearly custome was geuen vnto them. Now whis kynge Artaxerses letter was red before Rehum the chaunceler and Simsai the Scrybe and their comeell, they wente vp in all the haist to Ierusalem vito the Iewes, and forbad them with the arme and auctorite. worke goeth fast forth, and prospereth in their handes. Neuertheles we axed the Elders and sayde vnto them: Who hath comaunded you to buylde this house, and to make vp the walles therof? We axed their names also, that we might certifye the, and haue wrytten the names of the men that were their rulers.

But they answered is with these wordes, and sayde: We are the seruantes of the God of heauen and earth, and buylde the house $\dot{y}$ was buylded many yeares agoo, * which a greate kynge of Israel buylded and set vp. As for the residue of Israel, the prestes and Leuites, they were in all the cities of Iuda, euery one in his inheritaunce.

And the Nethinims dwelt in Ophel: and Zipha and Gispa belonged vnto the Nethinims. The ouerseer of the Lenites at Ierusalem, was Vsi the sonne of Bani, the some of Hasabia, the some of Mathania, the sonne of Micha.

^381 Of the children of Assaph there were syngers aboute $\mathfrak{j}$ busynes in the house of God: for it was the kynges commaundement cōcernynge them, that $\dot{y}$ syngers shulde deale faithfully, euery daye as acordinge was.

And Pethaia the some of Mesesabeel of the childrē of Serah the some of Juda nexte the kynge in all matters concernynge the people. And the children of Iuda that were without in the townes of their londe, dwelt some at Kiriath Arba, and in the vyllages therof, $\mathbb{t}$ at Dibon, and in the vyllages therof: and at Cabzeel, and in $\mathfrak{y}$ vyllages therof: and at Iesua, Molada, Bethphalet, Hazarsual, Berseba and in their vyllages: © at Siclag and Mochona, and in their vyllages: And at Enrimmon, Zarega, Ieremuth, Sanoah, Adullam and in their vyllages: At Lachis, and in the feldes therof: At Aseka, and in the vyllages therof: and dwelt from Berseba vnto the valley of Hinnom.

The children of Ben Iamin of Gaba, dwelt at Michmas, Aia, Bethel and in their vyllages. And at Anathoth, Nob, Anania, Hazor, Rama, Githaim, Hadid, Ziboim, Neballat, Lod, Ono $\tau$ in the Carpêters valley. And certayne of the Leuites $\dot{y}$ had porcions in Iuda, dwelt in Ben lamin.

THESE are $\mathfrak{y}$ prestes and Leuites that wente up with Zorobabel $y$ y sonne of Saalthiel and with Jesua: Seraia, Ieremy, Esdras, Amaria, Malluch, Hattus, Sechania, Rehum, Meremoth, Iddo, Ginthoi, Abia, Meiamin, Maadia, Bilga, Semaia, loiarib, Iedaia, Sallu, Anok, Helchias a Iedaia. These were the heades amōge the prestes and their brethren in the tyme of Jesua. The Leuites were these: Iesua, Bēnui, Cadmiel, Serebia, Iuda and Mathania, ouer the office of thankesgeuynge, they a their brethre: Bacbuchia © Vnni and their brethrē, were aboute them in the watches.
lesua begat loachim. Ioachim begat Eliasib. Eliasib begat loiada. Ioiada begat Ionathan. Ionathan begat Iaddua. And in the tyme of Ioachin were these the chefe fathers amonge the prestes: namely of Seraia was Meraia, of Ieremy was Hanania, of Eszdras was Mesullam, of Amaria was Iohanan, of Malluch was Ionathan, of Sebania was loseph, of Harim was Adna, of Meraioth was Heleai, of Iddo was Zachary, of Ginthon was Mesullā, of Abia was Sichri, of Miniamin Moadia was Piltai, of Bilga was Sammua, of Semaia was Ionathan, of Ioiarib was Mathnai, of ledaia was Vsi, of Sallai was Callai, of Amok was Eber, of Helchias was Hasabia, of Gedaia, was Nethaneel.
And in the tyme of Eliasib. Ioiada, Iohanan and Iaddua, were the chefe fathers amonge the Leuites, and the prestes wrytte vader the reigne of Darius y Persian. The children of Leui the pryncipall fathers were wrytten in the Cronicles, vntyll the tyme of Iohanan the sonne of Eliasib. And these were the chefe amoge the Leuites, Hasabia, Serebia and lesua the sonne of Cadmiel, $\tau$ their brethren ouer agaynst them, to geue prayse and thankes, acordinge as Dauid $\dot{y}$ mā of God had ordeyned it, one watch ouer agaynst another. Mathania, Bacbuchia, Obadia, Mesullam, Talmon and Acub were porters in the watch at the thresholdes of the gates. These were in the tyme of Ioiachim the sonne of lesua the sonne of losedec, and in the tyme of Nehemias the Debyte, and of the prest Eszdras the scrybe.

And in the dedicacion of the wall at Ieru- $\mathbb{C}$ salem, were the Leuites soughte out of all their places, that they mighte be broughte to lerusalem, to kepe ${ }^{\circ}$ dedicacion in gladnesse, with thankesgeuynges, with synginge, with Cymbales, Psalteries and harpes. And the children of the syngers gathered thē selues together from the playne countre aboute Ierusalem, and from the vyllages of Nethophathi, and from the house of Gilgal, a out of the feldes of Gibea a Asmaueth: for $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ syngers had buylded them ryllages aboute lerusalem. And $\dot{y}$ prestes and Leuites purified them selues, and clensed the people, the gates and the wall.

And I caused the prynces to go vp vpon the wall, and appoynted two greate queres of thankesgeuynge, which wēte on the righte hande of the wall towarde the Donggate, and after them wēte Hosaia, and halfe of the prynces of Iuda, © Asaria, Eszdras, Mesullam, luda, Ben Jamin, Semaia and Ieremy: and certayne of the prestes childrē with trompettes, namely Zachary $y$ sonne of Ionathan, the some of Semaia, the sonne of Mathania, the sonne of Michaia, the some of Sachur, the
some of Assaph, and his brethren, Semaia, Asareel, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nathaneel and Inda and IIanani, with the musicall instrumentes of Dauid $\dot{y}$ man of God.

And Eszdras $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$ scrybe before the towarde the Wellgate, and they wente up ouer agaynst them ypon the steppes of the cite of Danid at the goynge rp of the wall to the house of Dauid, vito the Watergate Eastwarde.

The other quere of thankesgeuynge wente ouer against them, and I after them, and the halfe parte of the people vpon $\hat{y}$ wall, towarde y Fornacegate vpwarde, nutyll y brode wall, and to $\hat{y}$ porte of Ephraim, and to the Oidgate, and to $\hat{y}$ Fyshgate, and to the tower of Hananed, and to the tower of Meah, wntyll the Shepegate. And in y presongate stode they styll, and so stode the two queres of thankesgeuynge of the house of God, and I and the halfe of the rulers with me, and the prestes, namely Eliachim, Maeseia, Miniamin, Michaia, Elioenai, Zachary, Hanania, with trōpettes, and Maeseia, Semaia, Eleasar, Vsi, Iohanan, Malchia, Elam and Aser. Aud the syngers songe loude, and Iesrahia was the ouerseer.

And the same daye were there greate sacrifices offred, at they reioysed: for God had gene them greate gladnesse, so that both the wynes and children were ioyfull, a the myrth of Ierusalem was herde farre of.

At the same tyme were there men appoynted ouer the treasure chestes (wherin were $f$ Heue offerynges, the firstlinges and the tithes) that they shulde gather them out of $\hat{y}$ feldes aboute the cities, to destribute the vnto the prestes and Leuites acordinge to the lawe: for Iuda was glad of the prestes, and Leuites, that they stode and wayted vpon the office of their God, and the office of the purificacion. And the syngers a porters stode after the commaundemēt of Dauid at of Salomon his sonne: * for in the tyme of Dauid and Assaph, were the chefe syngers founded, and the songes of prayse and thankesgeuynge vnto God. In the tyme of Zorobabel and Nehemias, dyd all lsrael geue porciôs vnto the syngers and porters, euery daye his porcion, and they gaue thinges halowed vnto the Leuites, and the Leuites gaue thinges that were sanctified, vato the childrē of Aaron.

(T)e riij. © Chapter.

AND what tyme as the boke of Moses was red in $\dot{y}$ eares of the people, there was lounde wrytten therin, $+\frac{t}{y}$ the Ammonites and Moabites shulde neuer come in to the congregacion of God, because they mett not the children of Israel with bred and water, $\ddagger$ and hyred Balaam against thē, that he shulde curse them: neuertheles oure God turned $\dot{y}$ curse in to a blessynge. Now whan they herde the lawe, they separated from Israel euery one that had myxte him selfe therin. And before this had the prest Eliasib delyuered the chest of $\dot{y}$ house of oure God vnto his kynsman 'Tobia: for he had made him a greate chest, and there had they aforetyme layed the meatofferynges, frankencense, vessell, and the tithes of corne, wyne and oyle (acordinge to the commaundement geuen to the Leuites, syngers and porters) and the Heueofferynges of the prestes.

But in all this was not I at lerusalem: for in $\dot{y}$ two and thirtieth yeare of Artaxerses kynge of Babilon, came I vato the kynge, and after certayne dayes optayned I lycence of the kynge to come to lerusalē. And I gat knowlege of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ euell that Eliasib dyd vnto Tobia, in that he had made him a chest in the courte of the house of God, and it greued me sore, and I cast forth all the vessels of Tobias house out of the chest, and commanded them to clense the chest. And thither broughte I agayne the vessels of the house of God, the meatofferynge and the incense.

And I perceaued, that the porcions of $\hat{y}$ Leuites were not geuen them, for the which cause the Leuites and syngers were fled, enery one to his londe for to worke. Then reproued I the rulers, and sayde: Why forsake we the house of God? But I gathered them together, and set them in their place. Then brought all Iuda the tithes of corne, wyne and oyle vato the treasure. And I made treasurers ouer $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ treasure, euen Selemia $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ prest, and Sadoc the scrybe, a of the Leuites Pedaia, and vnder their hande Hanan the some of Sachur the sonne of Mathania: for they were counted faithfull, and their office was, to destribute vnto their brethren. §'Thynke vpon me O my God here in, as wype not out [^382]my mercy, that I haue shewed on $\hat{y}$ house of my God, $\mathbb{x}$ on the offices therof.

At the same tyme sawe I some tredinge wyne presses on the Sabbath, and brynginge in clusters, and asses laden wyth wyne, grapes, fygges, and brynginge all maner of burthens vnto Ierusalem, vpon the Sabbath daye. And I rebuked them earnestly $\frac{8}{}$ same daye that they solde $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$ vytayles. There dwelt me of Tyre also therin, which broughte fysh and all maner of ware, and solde on the Sabbath vato the childrē of Iuda and Ierusalem. Then reproued I the rulers in Iuda, and saide vnto them: What euell thinge is this that ye do, and breake the Sabbath daye? Dyd not oure fathers euen thus, and oure God broughte all this plage vpon vs $\leftrightarrows$ vpon this cite? And ye make the wrath more yet vpon Israel, in that ye breake the Sabbath.

And whan the portes of Ierusalem were drawen vp before the Sabbath, I commaūded to shutt the gates, and charged that they shulde not be opened tyll after the Sabbath: and some of my seruauntes set I at the gates, $\dot{y}$ there shulde no burthe be broughte in on the Sabbath daye. Then remayned the chapmen and marchauntes once or twyce ouer nighte without Ierusalem with all maner of wares. Then reproued I them sore, $t$ sayde vnto them: Why tary ye all night aboute the wall? If ye do it once agayne, I wil laye handes upon you. From that tyme forth came they nomore on the Sabbath. And I sayde vnto the Leuites which were cleane, that they shulde come and kepe the gates, to halowe the Sabbath dayc. Thynke vpo me (O my God) cōcernynge this also, $九$ spare me acordynge to thy greate mercy.

And at the same tyme sawe I Iewes, that maried wyues of Asdod, Ammon and of Moab, and their children spake halfe in the speache of Asdod, and coulde not speake in $\dot{y}$ Iewish language, but by y tonge mighte a mā perceane euery people. And I reproued them, and cursed them, a smote certayne men of thē, and plucte them vp, and toke an ooth of them by God: ${ }^{a} \mathrm{Ye}$ shal not geue youre daughters vnto their sonnes, nether shal ye take their daughters vnto youre sonnes, or for youre selues. ${ }^{b}$ Dyd not Salomon y kynge of Israel symne ther in? © yet amonge many Heythen was there no kynge like him, $\tau$ he was deare vnto his God, and God made him kynge ouer all Israel, and the outlandish wemen.

And one of the children of Ioiada the sonne of Eliasib ${ }^{\text {y }}$ hye prest, had made a cōtracte wyth Saneballath the Horonite : but I chaced him fro me. O my God, thynke thou vpon them that are quyte of the presthode, and haue defyled the couenaunt of the presthode and of the Leuites. Thus clensed I them from all soch as were outlandish, and appoynted the courses of the prestes and Leuites, euery one to his office, and to offre the wod at tymes appoynted, and the first frutes. Thynke thou vpon me ( O my God) for the best.

a N the tyme of Ahasuerus, which reigned from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and seuen and twentye londes, what tyme as he sat on his seate roiall in the castell of Susan in the thirde yeare of his reigne, loe made a feast voto all his prynces and seruauntes, namely vito the mightie men of Persia and Media, to the Debities and rulers of his countrees, that he mighte shewe the noble riches of his kingdome, and the glorious worshippe of his greatnesse, many dayes longe, enen an hundreth and foure score dayes.

And whan these dayes were expyred, the kynge made a feast vito all the people that were in the castell of Susan, both vnto greate and small, seuen dayes longe in the courte of the garden by the kynges palace: where there hanged whyte, reed $\mathfrak{c}$ yalow clothes, fastened with coardes of lymen and scarlet in siluer rynges, vpon pylers of Marble stone.

The benches were of golde and siluer made vpon a pauement of grene, white, yalowe and black Marble. And y drinke was caried in vessels of golde, and there was ener chaunge of vessell. And the kinges wine was moch acordynge to the power of the kynge. And noman was appoynted what he shulde drinke: for the kynge had commaunded all the officers of his house, that euery one shulde do as it lyked him. And the quene Vasthi made a feast also for the wemen in the palace of Ahasuerus. And on the seuenth daye whan the kynge was mery of the wine, he comaunded Mehuman, Bistha, Harbona, Bigtha, Abagtha, Sethar and Charcas, the seuen chamberlaynes (that dyd seruyce in the presence of kynge Ahasuerus) to fetch the quene Vasthi with the crowne regall, that he might shewe $\dot{y}$ people and prynces hir fairnesse : for she was bewtifull. But the quene Vasthi wolde not come at the kynges worde by his chamberlaynes. Then was the kynge very wroth, and his indignaciō kyndled in him.

And the kynge spake to y wyse men that had vnderstondinge in the ordinaunces of the londe (for the kinges matters must be hidled before all soch as haue knowlege of the lawe and iudgment: And the nexte vnto him were, Charsena, Sethar, Admatha, Tharsis, Meres, Marsena and Memuchan, the seuen prynces of the Persiās, and Meedes, which sawe the kynges face, and satt aboue in the kyngdome) What lawe shulde be execute vpon the quene Vasthi, because she dyd not acordynge to the worde of the kynge by his chamberlaines. The saide Memuchā before the kynge a the prynces: The quene Vasthi hath not onely done euell agaynst the kinge but also agaynst all the prynces and all the people in all the londes of kynge Ahasuerus, for this dede of the quene shall come abrode vato all wemen, so that they shall despyse their huszbandes $\exists$ before their eyes, and shall saye: The kynge Ahasuers comannded Vasthi y quene to come before him, but she wolde not. And so shall the pryncesses in Persia and Media saye lykewyse vinto all the kynges prynces, whan they heare of this dede of the quene, thus shall there aryse despytefulnes and wrath ynough. If it please the kynge, let there go a kyngly commaundemèt from him, and let it be wrytten acordynge to the lawe of the Persians and Medians (and not to be transgressed) that Vasthi come nomore before kynge Ahasuerus, and let the kynge geue the kyngdome vnto another that is better then she.

And $\dot{y}$ this wrytinge of the kynge which shalbe made, be published thorow out all his empyre (which is greate) that all wyues maye holde their huszbandes in honoure, both amonge greate and smal.

This pleased the kynge and the prynces,

[^384]and the kynge dyd acordynge to the worde of Memuchan. Then were there letters sent forth in to all the kynges londes, in to euery londe acordinge to the wrytinge therof, and to euery people after their lăguage, $\stackrel{ \pm}{y}$ enery man shulde be lorde in his awne house. And this caused he be spoken after the language of his people.

AFTER these actes whan the displeasure of kynge Ahasuerus was layed, he thoughte spon Vasthi, what she had done, and what was concluded concernynge her. Then sayde the kynges seruauntes: Let there be fayre yonge virgins soughte for the kynge, and let the kynge appoynte ouerseers in all $\dot{y}$ londes of his empyre, that they maye brynge together all fayre yonge virgins vato the castel of Susan to the Wemens buyldinge, vader the hande of Hegai the kynges chamberlayne, that kepeth the wemen, and let him geue them their apparell. And loke which damsell pleaseth the kynge, let her be quene in Vasthis steade. This pleased the kynge, and he dyd so.

In the castell of Susan there was a Iewe, whose name was Mardocheus, the sonne of Iair, the sonne of Simei, the some of Cis, the sonne of Iemini, which was caried awaye from Ierusalem, * whan Iechonias the kynge of Iuda was led awaye, (whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon earied awaye) and he norished Hadassa (that is Hester) his vucles daughter: for she had nether father ner mother, and she was a fayre and beutyfull damsell. And whan hir father and mother dyed, Mardocheus receaued hir as his awne daughter.

Now whan $\stackrel{\ominus}{\mathrm{y}}$ kynges cōmaundemèt and cōmyssion was published, $\tau$ many dāsels were broughte together vuto the castell of Susan vnder y hande of Hegai, Hester, was take also vnto $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ kynges house vnder $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ hande of Hegai $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ keper of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ wemé, a the damsell pleased him, © she founde grace in his sighte. And he put her with hir maydēs in $\dot{y}$ best place of ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{y}$ Womès buildige. And Hester shewed it not vuto hir people a hir kynred: for Mardocheus had charged her, $\frac{t}{y}$ she shulde not tell it. And Mardocheus walked euery daye before $\dot{y}$ courte of $\stackrel{y}{y}$ Womēs buyldinge, $\dot{y}$ he might knowe how Hester dyd, and what shulde become of her.

And whan the appoynted tyme of enery dansell came that she shilde come to $\hat{y}$ kynge Ahasuerus, after that she had bene twolue monethes in the deckynge of the wemen (for their deckynge must hane so moch tyme, namely sixe monethes with Balme a Myrre, a sixe monethes with good spyces, so were the weme beutifyed) then wente there one damsell muto $f$ kynge, and what so ener she requyred, $\dot{y}$ must be gene her to go with her out of the Womens buyldinge vito $\mathfrak{y}$ kynges palace. And whan one came in the euenynge, $\stackrel{\stackrel{8}{y} \text { same }}{ }$ wēte fro him on $\hat{y}$ morow in to $\dot{y}$ seconde house of wemen, vader the hande of Saasgas the kynges chamberlayne, which kepte $\dot{y}$ concubines. And she must come vito the kynge nomore, excepte it pleased the kynge, and that he caused her to be called by name.

Now whan the tyme came of Hester the daughter of Abihail Mardocheus vncle (whom he had reccaued as his awne daughter) $\stackrel{t}{y}$ she shulde come to the kynge, she desyred nothinge but what Hegai the kynges chamberlayne the keper of the wemen sayde.

And Hester founde fauoure in the sighte of all them that loked vpon her. And Hester was taken vito kynge Ahasuerus in to the house royall, in the tenth moneth which is called Tebeth, in the seuenthe yeare of his reigne.

And the kynge loued Hester aboue all the wemen, and she founde grace and mercy in his sighte before all the virgins: and he set the quenes croune vpon hir heade, and made her quene in steade of Vasthi. And the kynge made a greate feast vnto all his prynces and seruauntes (which feast was because of Hester) and let the londes be in quyetnes, a gaue royall giftes.

And whan the virgins were gathered together the seconde tyme, Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate. And as yet had not Hester shewed hir kymred and hir people, acordinge as Mardochens had bydden her: for Hester dyd after the worde of Mardocheus, like as whan he was hir tutoure. At the same tyme whyle Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate, two of the kinges chamberlaynes, Bigthan and Theres which kepte the dore, were wroth, and sought to laye their handes on the kynge Ahasuerus: Wherof Mardocheus gat knowlege, and tolde it vnto quene Hester, and Hester certified the kynge therof in Mardocheus name. And whan inquisicion was made, it was founde so. And they were both hanged on tre: and it was wryttē in the Cronicles before the kynge.

AFTER these actes dyd the kynge pro- ${ }^{2}$ mote Aman the sonne of Amadathi the Agagite, and set him hye, a set his seate aboue all $\dot{y}$ prynces that were with him. And all the kyuges seruauntes that were in the gate, bowed their knees, and dyd reuerence vito Aman: for the kinge had so comaunded. But Mardocheus bowed not the knee, and worshipped him not. 'Then the kynges seruauntes which were in the kynges gate, sayde vnto Mardocheus: Why transgressest thou the kynges commaundement? And whan they spake this daylie vnto him, and he folowed them not, they tolde Aman, that they mighte se whether Mardocheus matters wolde endure: for he had tolde them, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he was a Iewe. And whā Aman sawe, that Mardocheus bowed not the knee vnto him, ner worshipped him, he was full of indiguacion a despyte, that he shulde laye hondes onely on Mardocheus: for they had shewed him $\dot{y}$ people of Mardocheus, but he sought to destroye the people ol Mardocheus, and all the people that were in the whole empyre of Abasuerus.

In the first moneth that is the moneth Nissan, in $\hat{y}$ twolueth yeare of kinge Ahasucrus, was there occasion and oportunyte sought by Aman, from one daye to another, and from the same moneth vito the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar. And Amrà sayde vnto kinge Ahasuerus: There is a people scatered abrode and dispersed amonge all people in all the londes of thine empire, and their lawe is cōtrary vnto all people, and they do not after the kyuges lawes, nether is it the kinges profit to suffre the after this maner. If it please the kynge, let him wryte, that they maye be destroyed, a so will I weye downe ten thousande talentes of siluer, vnder the handes of the workmen, to be brought in to the kynges chamber. Then toke the kynge his rynge from his hande, and gaue it vnto Aman the sonne of $\Lambda$ madathi the Agagite the Jewes enemie. And the kinge sayde vito Aman: Let the silucr be geuen the, and that people also, to do withall what pleaseth the.

C Then were the kynges serybes called on $\dot{y}$ thirtenth daye of the first moneth, $a$ there was wrytten (acordynge as Aman commaūded) vnto the kynges prynces, and to the Debites euery where in the londes, and to the eaptaynes of euery people in the countrees on euery syde, acordynge to the wrytinge of euery nacion, and after their language in the name of kynge Ahasuerus, and sealed with the kynges rynge. And the wrytynges were sent by postes in to all the kynges lodes, to rote out, to kyll, and to destroye all Iewes, both yonge and olde, childrē and wemen in one daye (namely vpon the thirtenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar) and to spoyle their goodes.
'This was the summe of the wrytinge, $\dot{y}^{\frac{t}{y}}$ there shulde be a commaundement geuen in all londes, to be published unto all people, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they shulde be ready agaynst the same daye. And the postes wente in all the haist acordynge to the kynges commaundement. And in the castell of Susan was the comaundement deuysed. And the kynge đ Aman sat $\pi$ drauke. And whā Hathat came in, and tolde Hester the wordes of Mardocheus, Hester spake vito Hathat, and eosmaunded him to saye vnto Mardocheus: All the kynges seruauntes, and the people in the londes of the kynge knowe, that who so euer commeth within the courte vnto $\hat{y}$ kynge, whether it be man or woman, which is not ealled, the eomaundement is that the same shal dye immediatly, excepte the kynge holde out the golde cepter vnto him, that he maye lyue. Aman sayde morouer : Yee and Hester the quene let no man come with the kynge vnto the bancket that she had prepared, excepte me, and tomorow am I bidden vnto her also with the kynge. But in all this am I not satisfied as longe as I se Mardochens the Iewe syttinge in $\mathfrak{y}$ kynges gate. But Hamā thought in his hert: Whom shulde the kynge els be glad to brynge vnto worshippe, but me? And Aman sayde vnto the kynge: Let the man unto whom the kynge wolde be glad to do worshippe, be broughte hither, that he maye be araied with the royall garmentes which the kynge vseth to weere: and the horse that the kynge rydeth vpon, and that the crowne royall maye be set vpon his heade. And Hester spake yet more before the kynge, and fell downe at his fete, a besought him, that he wolde put awaye the wyckednes of Aman the Agagite, and his deuice that he had ymagined against $y$ Iewes. And the kynge helde out the golden cepter vnto Hester. Then rose Hester, and stode before the kynge, and sayde: Yf it please the kynge, and yf I haue tonde grace in his sight, $\pi$ yf it be couenyent for the kinge, and yf it be accepted in his sighte, then let it be wrytté, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the letters of the deuyce of Ama the sonne of Amadathai the Agagite, maie be called agayne: which letters he wrote, to destroie y lewes in all y kynges lōdes. For how can I se the euell that shal happé vnto my people? and how can I loke vpon the destruction of my kynred?

Then sayde y kynge Ahasuerus vnto quene Hester, and to Nardocheus the Iewe: Beholde, I haue geven Hester the house of Aman, $\pi$ him haue they hanged vpon a tre, because he layed hāde vpon ${ }^{\circ}$ Iewes. Wryte ye now therfore for the Iewes, as it liketh you in the kynges name, and seale it with $y$ kynges rynge (for the wrytinges that were wrytten in y kynges name, and sealed with the kynges rynge, durst no man dysanulle.) Then were the kynges serybes called at the same tyme in the thirde moneth, that is the moneth Siuan, on the thre $₫$ twentieth daie.

And it was wrytten (as Mardocheus cōmaunded) vnto the Iewes and to the prynces, to the Debities and captaynes in the londes from India vntyll Ethiopia, namely, an hundreth and seuen and twentye londes, vato euery one acordinge to the wrytinge therof, vnto euery people after their speche, and to the Iewes acordinge to their wrytinge and language.

And it was written in the kynge Ahasuerus name, and sealed with the kynges rynge. And by postes that rode vpon swyfte yonge Mules, sent he the wrytinges, wher in the kynge graunted the Iewes (in what eities so ener they were) to gather them selues together, and to stonde for their lyfe, and for to rote ont, to slaye, and to destroye all the power of the people and londe that wolde trouble them, with children and wemen, and to spoyle their good ypon one daye in all the londes of kynge Ahasuerus, namely vpon the thirtenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar.
D The summe of the wrytinge was, how there was a comaundement geuen in all londes to be published vnto all the people, that flewes shulde be ready agaynst that daye to auenge them selues on their enemies. And the postes that rode vpon the Mules, made haist with all spede, acordinge to the kynges worde: and the commaundement was deuysed in the castel of Susan.

As for Mardocheus, he wente out from the kynge in royall apparell of yalow and whyte, and wyth a greate erowne of golde, beynge arayed with a garment of linnen and purple, and $\dot{y}$ eite of Susan reioysed $\mathbb{t}$ was glad: but vito the Iewes there was come light and gladnesse, t ioye a worshippe. And in all londes and cities, in to what places so euer the kynges worde and commaundemèt reached, there was ioye a myrth, prosperite and good dayes amonge the Iewes: in so moch that many of the people in the londe became of the lewes beleue, for the feare of the lewes came vpon them.

IN the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar, vpon the thyrtenth daye, which the kinges worde and cōmaundement had appoynted, that it shulde be done, euē vpon $\mathfrak{y}$ same daie ${ }^{t}$ the enemies shulde haue destroyed the Iewes to have oppressed them, it turned contrary wise, euen $\dot{y}$ the Iewes shulde subdue their enemies. Then gathered the lewes together in their cities within all y londes of kynge Ahasuerus, to laye honde on soeh as wolde do the euell, a no man coulde withstonde them: for e feare of thē was come ouer all people. And all the rulers in the londes, and prynces and Debities, and officers of the kinge promoted the Iewes: for the feare of Mardochens eame vpo the. For Mardocheus was greate in the kynges house, © the reporte of him was noised in all lōdes, how he increased © grewe.

Thus the Iewes smote all their enemies with a sore slaughter, and slewe and destroyed, a dyd after their wyll vnto soch as were their aduersaries. And at $\hat{y}$ eastell of Susan slewe the Iewes and destroied fyue hüdreth men: a slewe Parsandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, Parmastha, Arissai, Aridai, Vaiesatha, the ten sonnes of Aman $\dot{y}$ sonne of Anadathi y enemie of the Iewes: but on his goodes they layed no handes. At the same tyme was the kynge certified of the nombre of those that were slaine at the eastell of Susan. And the kynge sayde vnto quene Hester: The Iewes have slayne and destroyed fyue hūdreth men at $\dot{y}$ eastell of Susan, and the ten somnes of $A \mathrm{ma}$ : What shal they do in the other londes of y kynge? What is thy peticion, that it maye be geuen the? a what requirest thou more to be done? Hester sayde: Yf it please the kynge, let him suffre the Iewes tomorow also to do acordinge vnto this dayes commaundement, that they maye hange Amans ten somnes vpo $\hat{y}$ tre. And the kynge eharged to do so, and the commaundement was deuysed at Susan, a Amans ten sonnes were hanged. And the lewes gathered the selnes together at Susan, vpon the fourtenth daye of the moneth Adar, and slewe thre hundreth men at Susan, but on their goodes they laied no hādes.

As for the other Iewes in the kynges lodes, they came together, a stode for their lyues, © gatt rest fro their enemies: and slewe of their enemies fyue and seuentye thousande, howbeit they layed no hondes on their goodes. This was done on the thirtetth daie of the moneth Adar, and on the fourtenth daye of the same moneth rested they, which (daye) they ordeyned to be a daye of feastinge and gladnesse. But the lewes at Susan were come together both on the thyrtenth daye and on the fourtenth, and on the fyftenth daye they rested, and the same daye ordeyned they to be a daye of feastinge a gladnes. Therfore the lewes that dwelt in the vyllages and vnwalled townes, ordeyned $\dot{y}$ fourtenth daye of the moneth Adar, to be a daye of feastinge and gladnes, and one sent giftes vnto another.

And Mardochens wrote these actes, and sent the writinges vinto all the lewes ${ }^{t}$ were in all $\hat{y}$ londes of kynge Ahasuerus, both nye and farre, that they shulde yearly receaue and holde the fourtenth and fiftenth daie of the

And the Iewes receaued it that they had begonne to do, and that Mardocheus wrote vnto them: how that Aman the some of Amadathai all y Iewes enemye, had denysed to destroye all the Iewes, and caused the lot to be cast for to put them in feare, and to brynge them to nanghte: and how Hester wente and spake to the kynge, that thorow letters his wicked deuyce (which he ymagyned agaynst the Iewes) might be turned von his awne heade, and how he and his sonnes were hanged on the tre. For the which cause they called this daye Purim after the name of the lot, acordynge to all $\hat{y}$ wordes of this wrytinge: and what they the selues had sene, and what had happened vnto them.

And the lewes set it vp, and toke it spon them and their sede, and vpon all soch as ioyned themselues ruto them, that they wolde not mysse to obserue these two dayes yearly, acordynge as they were wrytte and appoynted, how $\dot{y}$ these dayes are not to be forgotten, but to be kepte of childers children amoge all kynreds in all londes and cities. They are the dayes of Purim, which are not to be ouer-

And quene Hester the daughter of Abihail and Mardochens the Iewe, wrote with all anctorite, to confirme this seeonde wrytinge of Purim, and sent the letters vnto all the lewes in the hundreth and seuen and twentye londes of y empyre of Ahasuerus, with frendly and faithfull wordes, to confirme these dayes of P'urim, in their tyme appoynted, acordynges as Mardocheus the Iewe and Hester the quene had ordeined eōcernynge them: lyke as they ypon their soule and vpon their sede had cofirmed the ates of the * fastinges and of hir copplainte. And Hester commaunded to stablish these actes of this Purim, and to wryte them in a boke.

解T happened also apon a tyme, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ that when the seruauntes of God came a stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them, and stode before him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence commest thou? Sathan answered and sayde: 'I haue gone aboute the lode, and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathan: Hast thou not considered my sernaunt lob, how that he is an immocent a vertuous man soch one as feareth God, and eschueth euell, [^385]and that there is none tike him in the londe ? But thou mouedest me agaynst him, to punysh him: yet is it in vayne, for he contynueth still in his godlynesse.

Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde: Skynne for skynne? yee a man will geue all y' euer he hath, for his life. But laye thine honde ypon him, touch him once vpon the bone and flesh, and (I holde) he shall eurse the to thy face. Then sayde the LORDE vnto Satha: lo, there hast thou him in thy power, but spare his life.

So wente Sathan forth from the LORDE, and smote lob with maruelous sore byles, from the sole off the fote into his crowne: so that he sat ypon the grounde in the asshes, and scraped of the etter off his sores with a potsherde.

Then sayde his wife rnto him: Dost thou yet cōtynue in thy perfectnesse? curse God, $\pi$ dye. But Iob sayde vnto her: Thou speakest like a foolish woman. Seinge we have receaved prosperite at the honde of God, wherfore shulde we not be content with aduersite also? "In all these thinges, dyd not Iob synne with his lippes.

Now when Iobs frendes herde of all i trouble, that happened wnto him, there came thre off them, euery one from his owne place: namely, Eliphas the Themanite, Baldad the Suhite, and Sophar the Naamathite.

For they were agreed together to come, to shewe their compassion vpon him, and to comforte him. So when they lifte vp their eyes a farre off, they knewe him not.

Then they cried, and wepte: then euery one off them rente his clothes, and sprynckled dust vpon their heades in the ayre. 'They sat them downe by hin also vpon the grounde, vij. dayes and vij. nightes. Nether was there eny of them that spake one worde vnto him, for they sawe that his payne was very greate.

Who wil saye vnto him: what doest thou? ${ }^{d} \mathrm{He}$ is God, whose wrath no man maye withstode : but the proudest of all must stoupe vader him. How shulde I then answere him? or, what wordes shulde I fynde out agaynst him? Yee though I be rightuous, yet will I not geue him one worde agayne, but mekely submytte my self to my iudge. All be it that I call rpon him, and he heare me, yet am I not sure, $\frac{t}{y}$ he hath herde my voyce: he troubleth me so with the tempest, and woundeth me out of measure without a cause. He will not let my sprete be in rest, but fylleth me with bytternesse.

But lo, he hath pyked a quarell agaynst me, a taketh me for his enemy: he hath put my fote in the stockes, a loketh narowly vnto all my pathes. Beholde, vnto these vnreasonable wordes of thyne wil I make answere.

Shulde God be reproued of man? Why 污 doest thou then stryue agaynst him, because he geueth the no accomptes of all his doinges? For whē God doth once commaunde a thinge, there shulde no man be curious, to search

[^406]whether it be right. "In dreames and visions of the night season (when slombrynge eometh vpo me $\overline{,}$, that they fall a slepe in their beddes) he rowneth them in the eares, he infourmeth them, as sheweth the planely, that it is he, which withdraweth man from euell, delyuereth him from pryde, kepeth his soule from destruccion, a his life from $\dot{f}$ swearde. he chasteneth him with sicknesse, a bringeth him to his bed: he laieth sore punyshmēt vpō his bones, so that his life maye awaye with no bred, a his soule abhorreth to eate eny dayntie meate: In so moch, that his body is clene consumed awaye, a his bones appeare no more. His soule draweth on to destruccion, © his life

Now yf there be an angel (one amonge a thousande) sent for to speake vnto má, and to shewe him the right waye: the the LORDE is mercifull vnto him, a sayeth: He shalbe delyuered, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he fall not downe to destruecion, for Iam sufficiently recōciled. Than his Hesh (which hath bene in misery a trouble) shalbe, as it was in his youth. For yf he submitte himself vnto God, he is gracious, a sheweth him his countenaunce ioyfully, is rewardeth man for his rightuousnes. Soch a respecte hath he rnto mē. Therfore let a man cōfesse, ( ( saye:) I offended, but he hath chastened $\mathbb{}$ refourmed me: I dyd vnrightuously, neuerthelesse he hath not recöpensed me therafter. Lo, thus worketh God all waie with mä, that he kepeth his soule from perishinge, a latteth him enioye the light of f lyuinge. Marke well (O Iob) a heare me: holde the still, vntill I haue spoken. But yf thou hast eny thinge to saye, then answere me and speake, for thy answere pleaseth me. If thou hast nothinge, then heare me, and holde thy tonge, so shal I teach the wyszdome.

${ }^{9}$ E LIU proceaded forth in his comunicacion, a sayde: Heare my wordes ( O ye wyse men) herken vnto me, ye $\frac{t}{y}$ haue vnderstondinge. For like as the mouth tasteth the meates, so the eare proueth a discerneth the wordes. 'As for the indgmèt, let vs seke it out amonge oure selues, $\dot{y}$ we maye knowe what is right. And why? Iob hath sayde: I am

[^407]rightuous, but God doth me wronge. I must nedes be a lyar, though my cause be right: a violētly am I plaged, where as I made no fawte. where is there soch one as Iob, $\dot{y}$ drinketh vp scornefulnes like water? which goeth in $\dot{y}$ eompany of wicked doers, $\pi$ walketh with vngodly mé? For he saieth: Though a mā be good, yet is he naught before God. Therfore herkē vito me, ye $\dot{y}$ haue vnderstondinge.

Farre be it from God, that he shulde medle with wickednesse: and farre be it from the Allmightie, $\frac{t}{y}$ he shulde medle with varightuous dealynge: but he rewardeth the workes of man, ${ }^{d}$ and causeth euery man to fynde acordinge to his wayes. For sure it is, that God codemneth no man wrongeously, and the iudgment of the Allmightie is not inrightuous. Who ruleth the earth in his steade? Or, whom hath he set to gouerne the whole worlde? To whom hath he geuen his herte, for to drawe his sprete and breth vnto him? - All flesh shal come together vnto naught, a all mē shal turne agayne vito earth. If thou now haue vnderstodinge, heare what I saye and herken to the voyce of my wordes.

Maye he be made whole, that loueth no right? Yf thou were a very innocent man, shuldest thou then be punyshed? For he is enen the same, $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$ knoweth the rebellious kynges, a sayeth to princes: Vngodly men are ye. He hath norespecte unto the personnes of $\dot{y}$ lordly, « regardeth not the rich more the poore. For they be all the worke of his hondes.

In the twincklinge off an eye shall they be slayne: and at mydnight, when the people $\pi$ the tyrauntes rage, then shal they perish, àd be taken awaye without hondes. 'And why ? his eyes loke vpon the wayes of man, and he seyth all his goinges. There is no darcknes ner thicke shadowe, $\frac{t}{y}$ can hyde the wicked doers from him. For no mä shalbe suffred to go in to iudgment with God.
${ }^{8}$ Many one, yee innumerable doth he punyshe and setteth other in their steades. For he knoweth their euell © darcke workes, therfore shal they be destroyed. They that were in y steade of Seers, dealt like vngodly mé. Therfore turned they back traytorously and vofaithfully frō hi, a wolde not receaue his wayes. In so moeh that they haue caused [^408]yf voyce of the poore to come vnto him, a now he heareth the coplaynte of soch as are in necessite. If he delyuer a graunte pardo, who will iudge or condemne? But yf he hyde awaye his countenaunce, who wil turne it aboute agayne, whether it be to the people or to eny man? For the wickednesse $\pi$ synne of $\mathfrak{y}$ people, he maketh an ypocrite to reigne ouer thē. For so moch then as I haue begonne to talke of God, I wil not hyndre the. If I haue gone amysse, enfourme me: yf I haue done tronge, I wil leaue of. Wilt thou not geue a reasonable answere? Art thou afrayed of eny thinge, seynge thou beganest first to speake, a not I? For els the men of vnderstödinge $\tau$ wisdome that haue herde me, might saye: What cast thou speake? As for Iob he hath nether spoken to the purpose ner wysely. O father, let Iob be well tryed, because he hath turncd himself to $\mathfrak{y}$ wicked: yee aboue his synnes he hath blasphemed, which offence he hath done euen before vs , in $\dot{y}$ he stryueth agaynst God with his wordes.

Cye mpo. Chapter.

(1)LIU spake morouer, and sayde: Thinkest thou it right that thou sayest: I am rightuous before God? Seinge thou sayest so, how doest thou knowe it? What thinge hast thou more excellēt, the I f am a synner? Therfore will I geue answere unto the $r$ thy frendes: loke mnto the heaué, a beholde it: cosidre fy cloudes, how they are hyer then thou. If thou symnest, what dost thou vnto him? Yf thine offences be many, how gettest thou his fauoure? If thou be rightuous, what geuest thou him? ${ }^{a}$ Or, what receaueth he of thy handes? Of soch an vngodly personne as thou, $\mathbb{x}$ of $\dot{y}$ sonne of man that is rightuous as thou pretendest to be: there is a greate crie a cōplaynte made by the that are oppressed with violence, yee euery man complayneth vpon the cruell arme of tyrauntes. ELIU proceaded forth in his talkinge, a sayde: holde the still a litle, and I shal shewe the, what I haue yet to speake on Gods behalfe. I wil open vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ yet more of myne inderstondinge, and proue my maker rightuous. True are my wordes, a no lye: and the knowlege wherwithall I argue agaynst the, is perfecte. Beholde, God casteth not awaye $y$ mightie, for he himselff is mightie in power and wisdome.

As for the mngodly, he preserueth the not but helpeth the poore to their right. ${ }^{b} \mathrm{He}$ turneth not his eyes awaye from the rightuous be setteth vp kynges in their Trone, and cöfirmeth them, so that they allwaye syt therin. But yf they be layed in preson and cheynes, or bounde with the bondes of pouerte: then sheweth he them their workes $\bar{a} d$ dedes and the synnes wherwith they hane vsed cruell violence.

He with punyshinge and nurturinge off them, rowneth them in the eares, warneth them to leane of from their wickednesse, and to amende. If they now will take hede and be obedient, they shall weere out their dayes in prosperite, ${ }^{c}$ and their yeares in pleasure àd ioye. But yff they will not obeye, they shall go thorow the swearde, a perish or euer they be awarre. As for soch as be fayned, dyssemblers and ypocrytes, they heape $v p$ wrath for them selues: for they call not vpon him, though they be his presoners. Thus their soule perisheth in foolishnesse, and their lyfe with $\dot{y}$ condēned. The poore delyuereth he out of his straytnesse, and comforteth soch as be in necessite and trouble. Euen so shall he kepe the (yf thou wilt be content) from the bottomlesse pytte that is beneth: a yf thou wilt holde the quyete, he shal fyll thy table with plenteousnesse.

Neuerthelesse, thou hast condemned the [^409]imdgment of the vagodly, yee euen soch a iudgment and sentence shalt thou suffre. For then shal not thy cause be stilled with crucltie, ner pacified with many giftes. Hath God ordened then, that the glorious life off the a all soch mightie men shulde not be put downe? Prolonge not thon the tyme, till there come a might for the, to set other people in thy steade. But bewarre that thon turne not asyde to wickelnesse and synne, which hytherto thon hast chosen more then mekenesse. Beholde, God is of a mightie hye power: Where is there soch a gyde and lawegeuer as he? Who wil reprone him of his waye? who wil saye vnto him: thou hast done wronge ?

O considre how greate and excellent his workes be, whon all men loaue and prayse: yee wondre at him, and yet they se him but a farre of. Beholde, so greate is God, that he passeth oure knowlege, nether are we able to come to $\mathfrak{y}$ experiēce of his yeares. He turneth y water to smal droppes, he dryueth his clondes together for to rayne, ${ }^{a}$ so that they poure downe and droppe vpon men. He can sprede out the cloudes (a couerynge off his tabernacle) and cause his light to shyne vo them, and to couer the botome of the see. By these thinges gouerneth he his people, and geueth the abundaunce of meate. In $\dot{y}$ turnynge of a hande he hydeth the light, a at his commaundement it commeth agayne. The rysinge vp therof sheweth he to his frendes and to the catell.

AT this my hert is astonnied, and moued out of his place. Heare then the sounde of his voyce, and the noyse $\dot{y}^{t}$ goeth out of his mouth. He gouerneth euery thinge vnder the heauen, and his light reacheth vnto the ende of the worlde. $\AA$ roaringe voyce foloweth him: for his glorious magesty geueth soch a thondre clappe, that (though a man heare it) yet maye he not perceaue it afterwarde. It geueth an horrible sownde, when God sendeth out his voyce: greate thinges doth he, which we can not coprehende. ${ }^{6}$ When he commaundeth the snowe, it falleth vpon the earth: As soone as he geueth the rayne a charge, Inmediatly the showers haue their strength and fall downe. He sendeth feare vpon euery man, that they might knowe their owne [^410]workes. The beestes crepe in to their dennes, a take their rest. Out of the south commeth the tempest, and colde out of the north.

At the breth of God, the frost commeth, a the waters are shed abrode. The cloudes do their laboure in geuynge moystnesse, the cloudes poure downe their rayne. He distributeth also on euery syde, acordinge as it pleaseth him to deale out his workes, that they maye do, what so euer he commaundeth the thorow the whole worlde: whether it be to punysh eny londe, or to do good vnto them, that seke him.

Herken vnto this (o lob) stonde still, and considre the wonderous workes of God. Art thou of coincel with God, when he doth these thinges? When he causeth the light to come forth of his cloudes? Art thou of his coūcell, when he spredeth out the cloudes? Hast thou the perfecte knowlege of his wonders? and how thy clothes are warme, whe the lōde is still thorow the south wynde? hast thou helped him to spred out the heauen, which is to loke rpō, as it were cast of cleare metall? Teach vs what we shal saye unto hi, for we are vmmete because of darcknes. Shal it be tolde him, what I saye? Shulde a man speake, or shulde he kepe it backe? For euery mā seith not the light, $\frac{t}{y}$ he kepeth cleare in the cloudes, which he clenseth whan he maketh the wynde to blowe. Golde is brought out of the north, but the prayse and honoure off Gods feare commeth fro God himself. It is not we that can fynde out the allmightie: for in power, equite and rightuousnesse he is hyer then can be expressed. Seinge then that euery body feareth him, why shulde not all wyse men also stōde in feare of hī?

Him will I accepte, and not deale with you after youre foolishnesse: in that ye haue not spoké $\mathfrak{y}$ thinge which is right, like as my seruaunt Iob hath done.

So Eliphas the Themanite, Baldad $\dot{\circ}$ Suhite and Sophar the Namathite wēte their waye, and did acordynge as the LORDE commannded them. The LORDE also "accepted the personne off Iob, and the LORDE turned him vnto lob, whe he prayed for his frendes: ${ }^{d}$ Yee the LORDE gaue Iob twyse as moch as he had afore.

And the came there vnto him all his brethren, all his sisters with all them that had bene off his acquātañce afore, and ate bred with him in his house, wondringe at him, ad comfortinge him ouer all the trouble, that the LORDE had brought spon him. 'Euery mā gaue him a shepe and a Iewell of golde.

And the LORDE made Iob richer then he was before: for he had xiiij. M. shepe, vi. M. camels, a M. yoek oxē, and a M. asses. He had children also: vij. somes andiij. doughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde, pouerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In all the londe were none founde so fayre, as the doughters of Iob, © their father gave them enheritaunce amonge their brethren. After this lyued lob xl. yeares, so that he sawe his children, $\mathbb{a}$ his childers children vnto the fourth generacion. ${ }^{f}$ And so he dyed, beinge olde $\mathfrak{z}$ of a perfecte age.

OHOW louynge is God vnto Israel, to soch as are of a clene hert? Neuerthelesse my fete were allmost gone, my tread-

[^457]inges had wel nye slipte. And why? I was greued at $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ wicked, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ to se the vngodly in soch prosperite. For they are in no parell of death, but stonde fast like a palace. They come in no misfortune like other folke, nether are they plaged like other men. And this is the cause that they be so puft vp in pryde, a ouerwhelmed with cruelte and vnrightuousnesse. Their eyes swell for fatuesse, they do euen what they lyst. Corrupte are they, and speake blasphemies maliciously, proude and presumptuous are their wordes. They stretch forth their mouth wnto the heauen, a their tonge goeth thorow the worlde. Therfore fall the people vuto them, and there out sucke they no sinall auauntage. ${ }^{b}$ Tush (saye they) how shulde God perceaue it? is there knowlege in the most hyest? Lo, these are the ungodly, these prospere in the worlde, these have riches in possession. Shulde I then clense my hert in vayne (thought I) 's wash my hondes in innocency? Wherfore shulde I be then punyshed daylie, $\pi$ be chastened euery mornynge? Yee I had allmost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children. Then thought I to vnderstonde this, but it was to harde for me. Vntill I wēte in to y Sanctuary of God, $\tau$ considered the ende of these men. Namely, how thou hast set thē in a slippery place, ${ }^{d}$ that thou maiest cast the downe headlynges a destroye thé. O how sodenly do they consume, perish, $x$ come to a fearfull ende?' 'Yee euen like as a dreame when one awaketh, so makest thon their ymage to vanish out of the cite. Thus my hert was greued, $₫$ it wente euen thorow my reynes.

So foolish was I and ignoraunt, and as it were a beest before the. Neuerthelesse, I am allwaye by the, thou holdest me by my right hande. Thou ledest me with thy coūcel, and afterwarde receauest me vnto glory. O what is there prepared for me in heauen? there is nothinge vp $\bar{o}$ earth, that I desyre in comparison of the. My flesh and my herte fayleth, but God is the strength of my hert, and my porcion for euer. ${ }^{f}$ For lo, they that forsake the, shal perisle, thou destroyest all them that committe fornicacion agaynst the. But it is good for me, to holde me fast by God, to put Therfore wil I remembre the workes of the LORDE, and call to mynde thy wonders of olde tyme. I wil speake of all thy workes, and my talkynge shalbe of thy doinges.

Thy waye (o God) is holy, who is so greate T mightie as God? Thou art the God, that doth wonders, thou hast declared thy power amonge the people. ${ }^{6}$ Thou with thine arme hast delyuered thy people, even the sonnes of Iacob and loseph. Sela. The thicke cloudes poured out water, $y^{\circ}$ cloudes thōdered, and thy arowes wente abrode. Thy thonder was herde rounde aboute, the lighteninges shone vpon the grounde, the earth was moued and shoke [^461]withall. Thy waye was in the see, and thy pathes in the greate waters, yet coude no man knowe thy fotesteppes. Thou leddest thy people like a flocke of shepe, by the honde of Moses and Aaron.

Cye Itritij. A psalme of Asaph.

${ }^{9} \mathrm{H}$EARE my lawe (o my people) eneline youre eares vnto $\dot{y}$ wordes of my mouth. I wil open my mouth in parables, and peake of thinges of olde. Which we haue speake of thinges of olde. Which we haue herde and knowne, and soch as oure fathers haue tolde rs. That we shulde not hyde them from the children of the generacions to come: but to shewe the honoure of the LORDE, his might and wonderfull workes that he hath done. He made a couenaunt with Iacob, ${ }^{b}$ and gane Israel a lawe, which he comaunded oure forefathers to teach their children. That their posterite might knowe it, and the children which were yet vnborne.

To the intent $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ when they came vp , they might shewe their children the same. That they also might put their trust in God, 3 not to forget what he had done, but to kepe his comaundementes. ${ }^{\text {co}}$ And not to be as their forefathers, a frowarde and ouerthwarte generacion, a generacion that set not their herte a right, and whose sprete was not true towarde 33 God. Like as the children of Ephraim, which beynge harnessed and carienge bowes, turned them selues backe in the tyme of battayll. They kepte not the couenañt of God, t wolde not walke in his lawe.

They forgat what he had done, and the wonderfull workes that he had shewed for them. Maruelous thinges dyd he in the sight of their fathers in the londe of Egipte, euen in the felde of Zoan. ${ }^{d}$ He deuyded the see and let them go thorow it, and made the waters to stonde like a wall. ${ }^{e}$ In the daye tyme he led them with a cloude, and all the night thorow with a light of fyre. He cloaue the hard rockes in the wildernesse, and gaue them drynke therof, as it had bene out of the greate deapth. He brought waters out of the stony rocke, so that they gusshed out like the ryuers. Yet for all this they synned agaynst him, and prouoked the most hyest in the wildernesse. They tempted God in their hertes, [^462]and requyred meate for their lust. ${ }^{f}$ For they spake agaynst God and sayde : Yee yee, God shal prepare a table in the wyldernesse, shall he? Lo, he smote the stony rocke, that the watery streames gusshed out, and the streames flowed withall: but how can he geue bred and prouyde flesh for his people? When the LORDE herde this, he was wroth: so the fyre was kyndled in Iacob, and heuy displeasure agaynst Israel.

Because they beleued not in God, and put not their trust in his helpe. So he commañded the cloudes aboue, and opened the dores of heauen. ${ }^{5}$ He rayned downe Manna vpō them for to eate, and gaue them bred from heauen. Then ate they angels fode, for he sent them meate ynough. He caused the east wynde to blowe vnder the heauen, and thorow his power he brought in the south wynde. ${ }^{k}$ He made flesh to rayne vpon them as thicke as dust, and fethered foules like the sonde of $\mathfrak{y}$ see. He let it fall amoge their tētes roude aboute their habitaciōs. So they ate $\frac{1}{\text { w }}$ were fylled, for he gane them their owne desyre. :They were not dispoynted of their lust.

But whyle y meate was yet in theyr mouthes: The heuy wrath of God came ypō thẽ, slewe $\dot{y}$ welthiest of thē, a smote downe $\dot{y}$ chosen men of Israel. But for all this they synned yet more, ${ }^{k}$ and beleued not his wöderous workes. Therfore their dayes were consumed in vanite, and sodenly their yeares were gone. When he slewe them, they sought him, and turned them early vnto God.

They thought then that God was their socoure, and that the hye God was their redemer. Neuerthelesse, they dyd but flater him in their mouthes, and dissembled with him in their tonges. For their herte was not whole with him, nether continued they in his couenaunt. But he was so mercifull, that he forgaue their mysdedes, and destroyed them not: Yee many a tyme turned he his wrath awaye, and wolde not suffre his whole displeasure to aryse. ${ }^{t}$ For he considered $\frac{t}{y}$ they were but flesh: euen a wyode that passeth awaye, and commeth not agayne. O how oft have they greued him in the wildernesse? How many a tyme haue they prouoked him in the deserte? 'They turned backe © tempted God,

VAU.

Let thy louynge mercy come wnto me (o LORDE) and thy sauynge health acordinge vato thy worde. That I maye geue answere vato my blasphemers, for my trust is in thy worde. O take not $\hat{y}$ worde of treuth vtterly out of my mouth, for my hope is in thy iudgmentes. So shal I allwaye kepe thy lawe, yee for euer and euer. And I wil walke at liberty, for 1 seke thy commaundementes. I wil speake of thy testimonies euen before kynges, and wil not be ashamed.

My delite shalbe in thy commaundementes, which I loue. My hondes also will I lift vp vnto thy commaundemētes which I loue, a my talkynge shalbe of thy statutes.

ZAlN.

O thynke von thy seruaunt as concernynge thy worde, wherin thou hast caused me to put my trust. For it is my comforte in my trouble, yee thy worde quyckeneth me.

The proude haue me greatly in derision, yet shrencke not I from thy lawe. I remembre thy euerlastinge iudgmentes (o LORDE) and am comforted. I am horribly afrayed for $\dot{y}$ vngodly, that forsake thy lawe.
Thy statutes are my songes in the house of my pilgremage. I thynke vpon thy name [^488](o LORDE) in the night season, and kepe thy lawe. It is myne owne, for I kepe thy commaundementes.

ILETH

Thou art my porcion (o LORDE) I am purposed to kepe thy lawe. ${ }^{a}$ I make myne humble peticion in thy presence with my whole herte, o be mercifull vnto me acordinge vnto thy worde. I call myne owne wayes to remembraunce, and turne my fete in to thy testimonies. I make haist, and prolonge not the tyme, to kepe thy commaundemétes. The congregacions of the vngodly haue robbed me, but I forget not thy lawe. ${ }^{\circ}$ At mydnight stonde I vp, to geue thakes unto the, for the iudgmentes of thy rightuousnesse.

I am a companyon of all them that feare the, ${ }^{c}$ and kepe thy commaundementes.

The earth (o LORDE) is full of thy mercy, O teach me thy statutes.

THETH.
3 O LORDE, thou hast dealt frendly with thy seruaunt, acordinge vnto thy worde.

O lerne me kyndnesse, nourtoure a knowlege, for I beleue thy commaundementes.

Before I was troubled, I wente wronge, but now I kepe thy worde. Thou art good and frendly, ${ }^{d} \mathrm{O}$ teach me thy statutes.

The proude ymagin lyes vpon me, but I kepe thy commaundemètes with my whole herte. Their herte is as fat as brawne, but my delite is in thy lawe. It is good for me that I haue bene in trouble, that I maye lerne thy statutes. The lawe of thy mouth is dearer vnto me, the thousandes of golde as syluer.

IOD.
a Thy hādes haue made me ${ }^{\epsilon}$ and fashioned me, O geue me vnderstondinge, that I maye lerne thy commaundementes. They that feare the, wil be glad when they se me, because I put my trust in thy worde. I knowe (o LORDE) $\dot{y}$ thy iudgmentes are right, and $\frac{f}{y}$ thou of very faithfulnesse hast caused me be troubled. O let thy mercifull kyndnesse be my comforte, acordinge to the promyse that thou hast made vnto thy seruaunt. O let thy louynge mercies come vnto me, that I maye lyue, for thy lawe is my delyte. Let the proude be confounded, which handle so [^489]falsly agaynst me. But let soch as feare the, t knowe thy testimonies, be turned vnto me. O let my herte be vndefyled in thy statutes, that I be not ashamed.

CAPH.

My soule longeth for thy sauynge health, for my trust is in thy worde. Myne eyes loge sore for thy worde, sayēge: Oh when wilt thou cöforte me? For I am become like a botell in y smoke, yet do not I forget thy statutes. f How many are the dayes of thy seruaunt? Whe wilt thou be auenged of my aduersaries? ${ }^{8}$ The proude haue dygged pittes for me, which are not after thy lawe.

All thy commaundemētes are true, they persecute me falsly, O be thou my helpe.

They haue almost made an ende of me vpon earth, but I forsake not thy commaundemētes. O quyckē me after thy louinge kyndnes, $\pi$ so shall I kepe the testimonies of thy mouth.

LAMED.

O LORDE, thy worde endureth for euer in heaue. ${ }^{h}$ Thy treuth also remayneth from one generacion to another: thou hast layed the foundacion of the earth, and it abydeth.

They cötinue this daye acordinge to thy ordinaunce, for all thinges serue the. If my delyte were not in thy lawe, I shulde perishe in my trouble. I wil neuer forget thy cōmaundementes, for with the thou quyckenest me. I am thine, oh helpe me, for I seke thy commaundementes. The vngodly laye wayte for me to destroye me, but I considre thy testimonies. I se that all thinges come to an ende, but thy commaundemēt is exceadinge brode.
MEM.

O what a loue haue I rnto thy lawe? all 1 the daye longe is my talkynge of it. Thou thorow thy commaundement hast made me wyser the myne enemies, for it is euer by me.
$\because$ I haue more vnderstondinge then all my teachers, for thy testimonies are my studye.

Yee I am wyser then the aged, for I kepe thy comaundementes. I refrayne my fete from euery euell waye, that I maye kepe thy wordes. I shrenck not from thy iudgmentes, for thou teachest me. "O how swete are thy wordes vnto my throte? Y'ee more thē hony

These are the wordes of the Preacher, the sonne of Dauid, kynge of lerusalem.
LL is but vanite (saieth ${ }_{\mathrm{g}}^{\mathrm{y}}$ preacher) ${ }^{a}$ all is but playne vanite. For what els ${ }^{a}$ Ecclī. 12. b.
hath a mā, of all the laboure $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ he taketh vnder the Sonne? One generacio passeth awaye, another commeth, but the earth abydeth still. The Sōne aryseth, the Sonne goeth downe, © returneth to his place, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ he maye there ryse rp agayne. The wynde goeth towarde ŷ South, ¢ fetcheth his cōpase aboutc vnto the North, a so turneth in to himself agayue. ${ }^{a}$ All floudes rume in to the see, $\pi$ yet the see is not fylled: for loke vuto what place the waters rumne, thence they come agayne. All thinges are so harde, y no mi can expresse them. ${ }^{b}$ The eye is not satisfied with sight, the eare is not fylled with hearinge.
is The thinge ${ }^{+}$hath bene, eometh to passe agayue: $\tau \dot{y}$ thinge $\dot{y}$ hath bene doue, is done agayne, there is no new thinge vnder the Sonine. Is there eny thinge, wherof it maye be sayde: to, this is new? For it was loge agoo in the tymes $\dot{y}$ haue bene before vs. The thinge $\dot{y}$ is past, is out of remébraunce : Eué so the thiges that are for to come, shal no more be thought vp $\bar{o}$ amōge thé that come after. 1 myself $\hat{y}$ I Preacher, beynge kynge of Israel $\mathbb{T}$ lerusalè, applyed my mynde to seke out $\tau$ search for the knowlege of all thiges $\dot{y}$ are done mider heauē. Soch trauayle a laboure hath God geuè vnto ẙ childrē of mē, to exercyse thê selues therī.

Thus 1 haue considered all the thinges that cone to passe mider the Sone, $\mathbb{I}$ lo, they are all but vanite $\tau$ vexacion of mynde. The croked ean not be mayde straight, © the fautes cià not be nöbred. I comoned with myne owne herte, sayēge: ' lo , I am come to a greate estate, and haue gotte more wyszdome, the all they $\frac{t}{y}$ baue bene before me in lerusalem. Yee my hert had greate experiēce of wyszdome a knowlege, for there vinto 1 applyed my myude: $\dot{y}$ l might knowe what were wyszdome đ vuderstōdinge, what were erroure $\mathfrak{r}$ foolishnes. And I perceaued $\dot{y}$ this also was but a rexacion of mynde: for where moch wyszdome is, there is also greate trauayle a disquietues: a ŷ more knowlege a man hath, the more is his care.

Che ij. Cyapter.

${ }^{3}$ T$\mathrm{H} \overline{\mathrm{E}}$ sayde 1 thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease ts haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: in so moch that 1 sayde vnto laughter: thou art madd, and to myrth: what doest thou?
So I thought in my herte, to withdrawe my flesh from wyne, to applye my mynde vnto wyszdome, and to comprehéde foolishnes, vntill thie tyme that (amonge all $\hat{y}$ thinges which are vuder $\mathfrak{y}$ Some) 1 might se what were best for men to do, so longe as they lyue vider heauen.
${ }^{d}$ I made gorgious fayre workes, I buylded me houses, and planted vynyardes: I made me ortchardes and gardens of pleasure, and planted trees in them of all maner frutes. 'I made poles of water, to water y grene and frutefull trees withall. I bought seruauntes and maydēs, and lad a greate housholde. As for catell and shepe, 1 had more substaunce of them, then all they $\dot{y}$ were before me in Ierusalem. I gathered syluer $\uparrow$ golde together, euen a treasure of kynges $\mathbb{\imath}$ londes.
1 pronided me syngers and womē which coude playe of instrumentes, to make men myrth and pastime. I gat me drynkynge cuppes also and glasses. (Shortly) 1 was greater a in more worshipe, then all my predecessours in lerusale. For wyszdome remayned with me: a loke what so ener myne eyes desyred, 1 let them haue it: © wherin so euer my herte delyted or had eny pleasure, I withhelde it not frō it. Thus my hert reioysed in all $\dot{y} 1$ dyd, and this 1 toke for the porcion of all my trauayle. But whan I considered all the workes $\dot{y}$ my handes had wrought, and all the labours that I had taken therin: l , all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde, $\pi$ nothinge of eny value vnder $\hat{y}$ Some. Then turned 1 me to considre wyszdome, crroure and foolishnesse (for what is he amonge men, that might be compared to me $\hat{y}$ kynge in soeh workes?) and 1 sawe, that wyszlome excelleth foolishnesse, as farre as light doth darknesse. For a wyse man beareth his eyes aboute in his heade, but the foole goeth in the darknesse. I perceaued also that they both had one ende.

Then thought 1 in my mynde: Yf it happen vnto the foole as it doth vito me, what nedeth me then to laboure eny more for wyszdome? So 1 confessed within my harte, that this also was but vanite. For the wyse are euer as litle in remembraunce as the foolish, and all the dayes for to come shalbe forgotten, yee the wyse man dyeth as well as $\dot{f}$ foole. Thus begine 1 to be weery of my life, in so moch that I coude awaye with nothinge that is done vuder the Some, for all was but vanite a vexacion of mynde: Yee I was weery of all my laboure, which I had taken vnder the Sonne, beeause I shulde be fayne to leaue them vnto another man, that cometh after me: for who knoweth, whether he shalbe a wyse mā or a foole? And yet shal be be lorde of all my labours, which I with soch wyszdome haue taken vader the Sonne. Is not this a vayne thinge?

So I turned me to refrayne my mynde from all soch trauayle, as I toke vnder the Sonne : for so moch as a man shulde weery him self with wyszdome, with vnderstondinge and opportunite, and yet be fayne to leaue his labours vnto another, $\frac{t}{y}$ neuer swett for them. This is also a vayne thinge and a greate misery. For what getteth a ma of all $\frac{1}{y}$ laboure a tranayle of his mynde, $\frac{t}{y}$ he taketh vnder the Sonne, but heuynesse, sorowe a disquyetnes all $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ dayes of his life? In so moch that his herte can not rest in the night. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Is it not better then for a mā to eate and drynke, and his sonle to be mery in his laboure? Yee I sawe that this also was a gifte of God: ${ }^{a}$ For who maye eate, drynke, or brynge eny thige to passe without him? What hath a mā els (that doth eny thinge) 13 but weerynesse and laboure? For as touchinge the trauayle and carefulnesse which God hath geuen vnto mē, I se that he hath geuen it them, to be exercised in it. All this hath he ordened maruelous goodly, to enery thinge his due tyme. He hath plāted ignoraunce also in the hertes of men, $\frac{t}{y}$ they shulde not fynde out y grounde of his workes, which he doth from $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ beginninge to $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ ende. So I perceaued, y in these thinges there is nothinge better for a man, the to be mery a to do well so longe as he lyueth. For all $\frac{t}{y}$ a man eateth a drynketh, yee what so euer a ma enioyeth of all his laboure, $\dot{y}$ same is a gift of God. I cōsidered also $\frac{t}{y}$ what so euer God doth, it cōtinueth for euer, a ${ }^{\mathbf{y}}$ nothinge can be put unto it ner takē from it: © $\frac{\ddagger}{y}$ God doth it to $\mathfrak{y}$ intent, ${ }^{\mathrm{t}}$ men shulde feare him. ${ }^{d}$ The thinge $\dot{y}$ hath bene, is now: a the thinge $\mathfrak{y}$ is for to come, hath bene afore tyme, for God restoreth agayne the thinge that was past. Morouer, I sawe vnder $\hat{y}$ Sonne, vngodlynesse in the steade of iudgment, $\mathbb{\pi}$ iniquite in steade of rightuousnesse.

Then thought I in my mynde: God shal separate the rightuous from the vngodly, a then shal be the tyme a iudgmèt of all councels © workes. I comoned with myne owne herte also cōcernynge the childrē of men : how God hath chosen them, and yet letteth the apeare, as though they were beastes: for it happeneth vnto men as it doth mnto beastes, $\mathfrak{x}$ as the one dyeth, so dyeth $y$ other: yee they have both one maner of breth, so $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{t}}$ (in this) a man hath no preemynence aboue a beest, but all are sublued into vanite. Wherfore I indged those that are deed, to be more happie then soch as be alyue : yee him that is yet vnborne to be better at ease the they both, because he seith not the miserable workes that are done vader the Sonne. Agayne, I sawe that all trauayle and diligence of laboure was hated of euery man. This is also a vaine thinge, and a vexacion of mynde. 'The foole foldeth his handes together, $\tau$ eateth tp his owne flesh. One handfull (saieth he) is better with rest, the both $\dot{y}$ handes full with laboure and trauayle. Morouer, I turned me, and beholde yet another vanite voder the Sonue. There is one man, no mo but himself alone, hauynge nether childe ner brether: yet is there no ende of his carefull trauayle, his eyes can not be satisfied with riches, (yet doth he not remembre himself, it saye:) For whom do 1 take soch trauayle? For whose pleasure do I thus consume awaye my lyfe? This is also a vayne and miserable thinge. Therfore two are better then one, for they maye well enioye the profit of their laboure. If one of them fall, his companyon helpeth him vp againe: But wo is him that is alone, for $y$ f he fall, he hath not $\mathbb{C}$ another to helpe him vp. Agayne, when two slepe together, they are warme: but how can a body be warme alone? One maye be ouercome, but two maye make resistaūce : A threfolde cable is not lightly broken. A poore childe beyuge wyse, is better then an olde kinge, that doteth, and can not bewarre in tyme to come. BE not hastie with thy mouth, a let not thine hert speake eny thige rashly before God. For God is in heauen, a thou ypon earth, therfore let thy wordes be fewe. which is but a shadowe? Or, who wil tell a man, what shal happen after him vnder the Some? ' ${ }^{\circ}$ A good name is more worth then a precious oyntment, and the daye of death is better the $\dot{y}$ daye of byrth.

It is better to go in to an house of mournynge, then in to a bancket house. For there is the ende of all men, and he that is lyuinge, taketh it to herte. It is better to be sory then to laugh, for whe the countenaunce is heuy, the herte is ioyfull. The herte of $\dot{y}$ wyse is in the mournynge house, but the hert of the foolish is in the house of myrth. It is better to geue eare to the chastenynge of a wyse man, 'then to heare the songe of fooles. For the laughinge of fooles is like $\dot{y}$ crackynge of thornes vider a pott. And $\frac{t}{y}$ is but a vayne thinge.

Who so doeth wronge, maketh a wyse man to go out of his witt, and destroyeth a gentle hert. The ende of a thinge is better then the begynnynge. The pacient of sprete is better then the hie mynded. Be not haistely angrie in thy mynde, for wrath resteth in the bosome of a foole. Saye not thou: What is the cause that $\dot{y}$ dayes of $\dot{y}$ olde tyme were better, then they $\dot{y}$ be now? for that were no wyse question. Wyszdome is better then riches, yee moch more worth then the eye sight. For wyszdome defendeth as well as moneye, and the excellent knowlege and wyszdone geueth life vnto him that hath it in possession. Considre the worke of God, how that no man can make the thinge straight, which he maketh croked. Vse well the tyme of prosperite, and remembre the tyme of mysfortune: for God maketh the one by the other, so that a man can fynde nothinge els.

These ij. thīges also hane I cōsidred in $\dot{y} \mathfrak{C}$ tyme of vanite: ${ }^{\dot{t}}$ the iust man perisheth for his rightuousnes sake, a the vngodly liueth in his wickednesse. Therfore be thou nether to rightuons ner ouer wyse, ${ }^{d} \mathrm{y}$ thou perish not: be nether to vnrightuous also ner to foolish, lest thou die before thy tyme. It is good for the to take holde of this, $\boldsymbol{r}$ not to let $\hat{y}$ go out of thy hande. For he $\dot{y}$ feareth God shat escape them all.
' Wyszlome geueth more corage vnto the wyse, then ten mightie men of the citie: for there is not one iust vpo earth, $\dot{y}$ doth good, $\pi$ simeth not. Take not hede vnto euery
|worde ${ }^{t}$ is spoken, lest thou heare thy seruanut curse the: for thine owne hert knoweth, that thou thy self also hast oft tymes spoke leuell by other men. All these thinges have I proued because of wyszdome: ${ }^{a}$ for I thought to be wyse, hut she wente farther fro me then she was before, yee a so depe that I might D not reach wnto her. I applied my mynde also vnto knowlege, and to seke out seicee, wisdome and moderstondinge: to knowe the foolishnesse of the vngodly, and the erroure of totinge fooles. And I founde, ${ }^{b}$ that a woman is bytterer then death: for she is a very angle, hir hert is a nett, and hir handes are eheynes. Who so pleaseth God shal escape from her, but the synner will be taken with her.

Beholde (sayeth $\dot{y}$ preacher) this haue I diligently searched out $\boldsymbol{x}$ proued, $\stackrel{ \pm}{y} \mathbf{I}$ might come by knowlege: which as yet I seke, and fynde it not. Amonge a thousande men I haue founde one, but not one woman amonge all. ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Lo, this onely haue I founde, that God made man iust $\mathbb{t}$ right, but they seke dyuerse sotylties, where as no man hath wyszdome a vnderstōdinge, to geue answere there vato.

Be not haistie to go out of his sight, as se thou cotynue in no euell thinge: for what so euer it pleaseth him, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ doeth be. Like as when a kynge geueth a charge, his commaundement is mightie: Euen so who maye saye vito him: what doest thou ? ${ }^{\circ}$ Who so kepeth the commaundement, shall fele no harme: but a wyse mans herte discerneth tyme and maner: For euery thinge wil haue opportunite and iudgment, and this is the thinge that maketh men full of carefulnes a sorowe. And why? a man knoweth not what is for to come, for who wyll tell him? Nether is there eny mā $\stackrel{t}{y}$ hath power ouer $\dot{y}$ sprete, to kepe stil $y$ sprete, ner to have eny power in the tyme of death: It is not he also that ean make an ende of the batayll, nether maye mgodlynes delyuer hin $\frac{t}{y}$ medleth withall. shipe vpon another to his owne harme. For I haue oft sene $\dot{y}$ vngodly' brought to their graues, and fallen downe from the hye and glorious place: in so moch $\frac{t}{y}$ they were forgotten in the cite, where they were had in so hye a greate reputacion. This is also a vayne thinge. Because now that euell workes are not haistely punyshed, the hert of man geueth him self ouer vito wickednesse: But though an euell personne offende an hundreth tymes, and haue a longe life: yet an I sure, that it shal go well with the that feare God, because they haue him before their eyes. Agayne, as for the rngodly, it shall not be well with him, nether shal he prologe his dayes: but euen as a shadowe, so shall he be that feareth not God.

Yet is there a vanite vpon earth: There be iust men, vnto whom it happeneth, as though they had the workes of the vngodly: Agayne, there be vngodly, with whom it goeth as though they had the workes of $\mathfrak{y}$ rightuous. This me thinke also a vaine thinge. Therfore I commende gladnesse, because a man hath no better thinge vnder the Sonne, then to eate and drynke, and to be mery: for that shal he haue of his laboure all the daies of his life, which God geueth him vnder the Sonne. When I applied my mynde to lerne wyszdome, and to knowe the trauayle that is in the worlde (and that of soch a fashion, $\frac{t}{y}$ I suffred not myne eyes to slepe nether daye ner night) I vnderstode of all f workes of God, that it is not possible for a man, to attayne vnto y workes that are done vnder $\stackrel{\stackrel{y}{y} \text { Sonne: and though he }}{\text { S }}$ bestowe his laboure to seke them out, yet can he not reaeh mito the : yee though a wyse man wolde vndertake to knowe them, yet might he not fynde them.

with the synner: As it happeneth vnto the periured, so happeneth it also vnto him that is afrayed to be man sworne. Amonge all thinges $\frac{t}{y}$ come to passe vader the Sonne, this is a misery, that it happeneth vito all alyke. This is the cause also that the hertes of men are full of wickednesse, a madd foolishnesse is in their hertes as longe as they lyue, vntill they dye.

And why? As longe as a man lyueth, he is careles: for a quyek dogg (saye they) is better the a deed lion: for they that be lynynge, knowe $\frac{t}{y}$ they shall dye: but they $\frac{t}{y}$ be deed, knowe nothinge. nether deserue they eny more. For their memoriall is forgotte, so $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ they be nether loued, hated ner envyed: nether haue they eny more parte in $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ worlde, in all $\frac{t}{y}$ is done vnder the Sonne. Go thon thy waye then, eate thy bred with ioye, © drynke thy wyne with gladnesse, for thy workes please God. Let thy garmētes be all waye whyte, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ a let thy heade want no oyntmèt. ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{V}$ se thy self to lyue ioyfully with thy wife whom thou louest, all $\hat{y}$ daies of thy life (which is but vayne) $\dot{y}$ God hath gene the vader the Sonne, all $\dot{y}$ dayes of thy vanite: for $\dot{t}$ is thy porcion in this life, of all thy laboure $\tau$ trauayle $\frac{t}{y}$ thou takest ander the Sonne. What so euer thou takest in hande to do, that do with all thy power: for amōge the deed (where as thou goest vnto) there is nether worke, councell, knowlege ner wyszdome.

So I turned me vnto other thinges suder $\dot{y}$ Sonne, and I sawe, that in runnynge, it helpeth not to be swift : in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge : to fedynge, it helpeth not to be wyse: to riches, it helpeth not to be sutyll : to be had in fauoure, it helpeth not to be connynge: but that all lyeth in tyme of fortune. ${ }^{c}$ For a man knoweth not his tyme, but like as the fyshe are take with the angle, and as the byrdes are catched with the snare: Eue so are men taken in the perilous tyme, when it commeth sodenly vpon them.

This wiszdome have I sene also voder $\hat{y}$ Sone, $t$ me thought it a greate thinge. There was a litle cite, $\tau$ a few mé within it: so there came a greate kynge a beseged it, a made greate bulworkes agaynst it. DEED flyes $\stackrel{+}{y}$ corruppe swete oyntment a make it to styncke, are somthinge more worth then the wyszdome a honoure of a foole. A wyse mans hert is vpon the right hande, but a fooles hert is vpon the left. A dotinge foole thinketh, ${ }_{y}^{t}$ euery mā doth as foolishly as himself. If a prineipall sprete be geue the to beare rule,, be not negligèt the in thine office: for so shal greate wickednesse be put downe, as it were with a medecyne. Another plage is there, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne: namely, $\stackrel{f}{y}$ ignoraunce $\stackrel{t}{y}$ is comonly amonge prynces: in y a foole sytteth in greate dignite, d the rich are sett downe beneth: I se seruauntes ryde yon horses, t prynces goinge ypon their fete as it were seruames. ${ }^{g}$ But he $\dot{y}$ dyggeth vp a pytt, shall fall therin himself: $\mathbb{\pi}$ who so breaketh downe the hedge, a serpent shal byte him. Who so remoueth stones, shall hate trauale withall: and he that heweth wod, shalbe hurt therwith.

When an yron is blont, and $\stackrel{y}{y}$ poynt not sharpened, it must be whett againe, and that with might: Euen so doth wiszdome folowe diligence. $A$ babler of his tonge is no better, then a serpent that styngeth without hyssynge. The wordes out of a wyse mans mouth are gracious, but the lippes of a foole wil destroye himself. The begynnyuge of his talkynge is foolishnes, and the last worde of his mouth is greate madnesse. A foole is so full of wordes, that a man can not tell what ende he wyll make: who wyl then warne him to make a conclucion? The laboure of $y$ foolish is greuous vnto the, while they knowe not how to go in to the eite.

Wo be vito the ( $O$ thou realme and londe) $\mathfrak{C}$ whose kynge is but a childe, and whose prynces are early at their banckettes. But well is the ( O thou realme and londe) whose kinge is [^530]come of nobles, and whose prynces eate in due season, for strength and not for lust. Thorow slouthfulnesse the balkes fall downe, and thorow ydle hades it rayneth in at the house. I maye not awaye witl youre newmoones, youre Sabbathes and solempne dayes. ${ }^{a}$ Youre fastinges are also in vayne. I hate youre new holy dayes and fastinges, euen fro my very harte. They make me weery, 1 can not abyde them. Though ye holde out youre hondes, ${ }^{b}$ yet turne I myne eyes from you. And though ye make many prayers, yet heare I nothinge at all, for youre hondes are full of bloude.

Wash you, make you clene, ' put awaye youre euell thoughtes out of my sight, cease from doinge of euell and violence. Lerne to do right, applie youre selues to equyte, delyuer the oppressed, helpe the fatherlesse to his right, let the wydowes complaynte come before you. Now go to (saieth the LORDE) we wil talke together. Is it not so? Though youre synnes be as read as scarlet, shal they not be whyter then snowe? And though they were like purple, shall they not be like whyte woll? Is it not so? If ye be louynge $t$ obedient, ye shal enioye the best thinge that groweth in the londe. ${ }^{d}$ But yf ye be obstinate and rebellious, ye shalbe deuoured with the swerde: for thus the LORDE hath promised with his owne mouth.

How happeneth it then that the rightuous citie (which was full of equite) is become vnfaithfull as an whore? rightuousnes dwelt in it, but now murthur. ${ }^{e}$ Thy Siluer is turned to drosse, and thy wyne myxte with water. Thy prynces are traytours and companyons of theues. They loue giftes altogether, and folowe rewardes. As for the fatherles, they helpe him not to his right, nether wil they let the wydowes causes come before them. Therfore speaketh the LORDE God of hostes the mighty one of Israel: Ah I must ease me of myne enemies, and a venge me vpō thē. And therfore shal I laye my honde vpon the, and burne out thy drosse from the fynest and purest, and put out all thy leade, זs set thy indges agayne as they were somtyme, and thy Senatours as they were from $\mathfrak{y}$ begynnynge. ${ }^{5}$ Then shalt thou be called the rightuous citie, the faithful citie. But Sion shalbe redemed with equyte, and hyr captiuyte with rightuousnesse. For the transgressours and mngodly, and soch as are become vnfaithfull vnto the [^537]LORDE, must all together be vtterly destroyed.

And excepte ye be ashamed of the oketrees wherin ye haue so delited, and of the gardēs that ye haue chosen : ye shalbe as an oke whose leaues are fallen awaye, "and as a garden that hath no moystnesse. And as for the glory of these thinges, it shalbe turned to drie strawe, 'and he that made them to a sparke. And they shal both burne together, so that no man shalbe able to quench them.

MOROUER this is the worde that was opened vnto Esaye the sonne of Amos, ypon Iuda and Ierusalem. It will be also in processe of tyme: ${ }^{k}$ That the hill where the house of the LORDE is buylded, shalbe $\dot{y}$ chefe amōge hilles, and exalted aboue al litle hilles. 'And al heithe shal prease vnto him and the multitude of people shall go vnto him, speakinge thus one to another: ${ }^{/ 1 / \mathrm{vp}} \mathrm{v}$, let us go to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of $\hat{y}$ God of Iacob: ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ he maye shewe us his waye, ${ }^{n}$ and $\frac{t}{y}$ we maye walke in his pathes. For $\dot{y}$ lawe shal come out of Syon, and the worde of God from Ierusalem, and shal geue sentence amonge the heithen, and shal reforme the multitude of people: So that they shal breake their swerdes and speares, to make sythes, sycles a sawes therof. ${ }^{\circ}$
${ }^{p}$ From that tyme forth shal not one people lift vp wapen agaynst another, nether shal they lerne to fight from thensforth. It is to the that I crie (o house of Iacob) vp, let us walke in the light of the LORDE. But thou art scatred abrode with thy people (o house of lacob) for ye go farre beyonde youre fathers, whether it be in Sorcerers (whom ye haue as the phylistynes had) or in calkers of mens byrthes, wherof ye haue to many. ${ }^{q}$ As soone as youre londe was ful of syluer and golde, and no ende of youre treasure: so soone as youre londe was ful of stronge horses and no ende of youre charettes: ${ }^{r}$ Inmediatly was it ful of Idols also, euen workes of youre owne hondes, which ye youre selues have facioned, and youre fyngers haue made. There kneleth the man, there falleth the man downe before [^538]them, so $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ thou canst not bringe him awaye from thence.

And therfore get $\dot{y}$ soone in to some rock, ${ }^{a}$ and hyde the in the grounde from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from ${ }^{f}$ glory of his Magestie. Which casteth downc $\dot{y}$ high lokes of presumptuous personnes, ${ }^{6}$ and bryngeth lowe the pryde of man, and he only shall be exalted in $\dot{y}$ daye. For the daye of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE of hostes shal go ouer all pryde đ presumpciō, ypon all the that exalte the selues, and shal bringe them all downe: wō all high a stoute © Cedre trees of Libanus, and vpon all the okes of Basan, ypon all high hilles, and vpon all stoute mountaynes, ypon all costly towres, and ypon all stronge walles, vpon all shippes of the see, and vpon euery thinge $\frac{t}{y}$ is glorious and pleasaunt to loke vpon.
${ }^{c}$ And it shall bringe downe the pryde of man, ${ }^{d}$ and laye mans presumptuousnesse full lowe, and the LORDE shal only have the victory in that daye. "But the Idols shal utterly be roted out. Men shal crepe in to holes of stone, $f$ and in to caues of the earth, from the sight of the fearfull iudge, and from the glory of his magesty: ${ }^{8}$ what tyme as he shal make him vp to shake the earth. Then, the shal mā cast awaye his goddes of syluer and golde (which he neuertheles had made to honoure thē) vnto Molles and Backes: that he maye the better crepe in to the caues and rockes, and in to the cliffes of hard stones, from $\frac{g}{y}$ sight of the fearful iudge and from the glory of his Magesty.

${ }^{\text {a }}$ EUERY man can eschue a persone moued in anger, for what doth he wysely? Euen so shal $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE of hoostes take awaye frō Ierusalể a luda, all possessiōs a power, all meat and drinke, y captayne and the soudyare, $\dot{y}$ iudge and the prophete, the wyse and the aged mā, the worshipful of fiftie yeare olde, and the honorable : the Senatours, and men of inderstondinge : the masters of craftes and oratours. Then shall he sweare and saye: I can not 3 helpe you. Morouer, there is nether meate ner clothinge in my house, make me no rueler of the people. For Icrusalem and Iuda must decaye, because that both their wordes and councels are agaynst the LORDE, they prouoke the presence of his magesty vnto anger. Then shal they saye: O happie are the godly, for they maye enioye the frutes of their studies. 'But wo be to $\hat{y}$ vngodly and vnrightuous for they shalbe rewarded after their workes. O my people, rybaudes oppresse $\dot{y}$, and women haue rule of the.

O iny people, thy leders deceaue the, and ${ }^{1}$ treade out the waye of thy footsteppes. 'The LORDE is here to comon of the matter, and stondeth to geue iudgment with the people. Morouer thus saieth y LORDE: Seinge the doughters of Sion are become so proude, and come in with stretched out neckes, and with vayne wanton eyes: seinge they come in trippinge so nycely with their fete: Therfore shal the LORDE shaue the heades of the doughters of Sion, and make their bewtie bare in that daye. a NOW well than, I will synge my beloued frende a songe of his vynyearde. ' My beloued frende hath a vyneyearde in a very frutefull plenteous grounde. This he hedged, this he walled rounde aboute, and planted it with goodly grapes. In the myddest of it buylded he a towre, and made a wyne presse therin. And afterwarde when he loked $\frac{t}{y}$ it it shulde bringe him grapes, it brought forth thornes. I shewe you now my cause (o ye Citysens of Ierusalem and whole Iuda:) Iudge I praye you betwiste me: and my wynegardinge. ${ }^{d}$ What more conde haue bene [^541]done for it, that I haue not done? Wherfore then hath it geuen thornes, where I loked to have had grapes of it.

Well, I shall tell you how I will do with my vynyarde: I will take the hedge from it, that it maye perish, and breake downe $\dot{y}$ wall, that it maye be troden vader fote. I will laye it waist, that it shall nether be twysted nor cut, but beare thornes and breares. I wil also forbyd $\hat{y}$ cloudes, that they shal not rayne vpon it. As for the vynyarde of the LORDE of hoostes it is the house of Israel, and whole Iuda his fayre plantinge. Of these he loked for equyte, but se there is wronge : for rightuousnesse, lo , It is but misery.
Wo to you that ioyne one house to another, and bringe one londe so nigh vuto another, till ye can get no more grounde. 'Wil ye dwell vpon the earth alone? The LORDE of hoostes rowneth me thus: i myne eare: shal not many greater and more gorgious houses be so waist, that no man shall dwell in thé? And ten akers of vynes shal geue but a Quarte, and xxx. bushels of sede shal geue but thre.

Wo be vuto them that ryse vp early to use them selues in dronkynues, and yet at night are more superfluous with wyne. In whose companies are harpes and lutes, 'tabrettes and pipes, and wyne. But they regarde not the worke of the LORDE, ${ }^{3}$ and cosidre not the operaciō of his hondes. Therfore cometh my folck also in captiuyte, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ because they haue no vnderstondynge. Therfore gapeth hel, and openeth hyr mouth marvelous wyde: that pryde, boostinge and wisdome, with soch as reioyse therin, maye descende in to it.
'Thus shal man haue a fall, he shalbe brought lowe, and the high lokes of the proude layde downe. But the LORDE of hoostes, $\hat{y}$ holy God: shalbe exalted and vntouched, when he shal declare his equyte and rightuousnesse after this maner. Then shal ý lambes eate their apoynted foder, and shal fede plenteously in the mountaynes. go forth with his worke, that we maye se it. Let the councel of $\dot{y}$ holy one of Isracl come, and drawe nie, $y$ we mage knowe it.
${ }^{\circ}$ Wo vnto them that call euel good, and good euel: which make darcknesse light, $\pi$ light darcknesse, $\dot{y}$ make sower swete, and swete sower. Wo vito them that are wyse in their owne sight, and thinke them selues to haue understödinge. 'Wo whto them, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ are connynge men to suppe out wyne, and experte to set yp drōkēnesse. "These gyuc sentence with the vngodly for rewardes, but condemne the iust cause of the rightuous.

Therfore is the wrath of the LORDE kyndled also agaynst his people, and he shaketh his honde at them : yee he shal smyte so, that the hilles shal tremble. And their carcases shal lye in the ope stretes, like myre. $f$ After all this, the wrath of God shall not ceasse, but he shal stretch his hōde wyder. And he shal gyue a toke ento a straunge people, ${ }^{6}$ and call vnto them in a farre countre: and beholde, they shal come hastely with spede. There is not one faynt nor feble amonge them, no not a slogish nor slepery parsone. There shal not one of them put of the gyrdle from his loynes, ner lowse the lachet of his shue. Their arowes are sharpe, and their bowes bent. Their horse hoofes are like flynt, and their cart wheles like a stormy wyinde. Their crie is as it were of a lyon, and the roaringe of them like lyons whelpes. They shal roare, and hätch ip the praye, and no man shal recouer it or get it from the. In that daye they shalbe so fearce vpon them, as the see. And yf we loke onto the londe, beholde, it shalbe all darcknesse and sorowe. ## さl)e bij. Chapter.

IT happened in the tyme of Ahas the sonne of Ionathas, " which was the sonne of Ioathan Kynge of Iuda: that Rezin the Kinge of Siria, and Poca Romelies sonne, Kynge of [^543]|Israel: wente vp toward Ierusalem to besege it (but wanne it not.) Now when the house of Dauid (that is Ahas) herde worde therof, y Siria and Ephraim were confederate together: his herte quaked (yee and $\mathfrak{y}$ hertes also of his people) like as a tre in the felde, that is moued with the wynde.

Then sayde God vnto Esay: go mete Ahas (thou and thy sonne Sear Iasub) at the heade of $\dot{y}$ ouer pole, in the fote path by the fullers grounde, and saye vnto him: take hede to thy self and be still, but feare not, nether be faynt harted, for these two tales: that is: for these two smokynge fyre brandes, the wrath and furiousnes of Rezin the Sirian and Romelies sonne: because that the Kynge of Siria Ephraim and Romelies sonne haue will go downe in to Iuda, vexe thē, and brynge them vnder vs, and set a Kynge there, euen the sonne of Taball. For thus saieth the LORDE God ther to, It shall not so go forth, nether come so to passe: for the head citie of $\hat{y}$ Sirians is Damascus, but the head of Damascus is Rezin. And after fyue and threscore yeare, shal Ephraim be nomore a people. And the chefe citie of Ephraim is Samaria, but the head of Samaria is Romelies sonne. And yf ye beleue not, there shall no promyse be kepte with you. ${ }^{\text {a }}$

Morouer, God spake vnto Ahas, sayenge : requyre a token of the LORDE thy God, whether it be towarde the depth beneth or towarde $\mathfrak{y}$ hight aboue. Thē sayde Ahas: I will requyre none, nether will I tempte the LORDE. The LORDE answered: Then heare to, ye of the house of Dauid: Is it not ynough for you, that ye be greuous vnto men, but ye must greue my God also? And therfore the LORDE shal geue you a token of him self: ${ }^{b}$ Beholde, a virgin shal cōceaue and beare a sonne, and shal call his name Emanuel. Butter and hony shal he eate, $\dot{y}$ he maye knowe the euel, and chose ${ }^{\circ}$ good. But or euer that childe come to knowlege, to eschue the euel and chose the good: The londe (that thou art so afrayde for) shalbe desolate of both hir kynges.

The LORDE also shal sende a tyme vpon the, vpon thy people, and vpo thy fathers house (soch as neuer came sence the tyme $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ [^544]Ephraim departed from Iuda) thorow y kynge of the Assirians. For at the same tyme shal the LORDE whistle for the flyes ${ }^{\frac{t}{2}}$ are aboute the water of Egipte, ${ }^{\text {c }}$ and for y Beyes in the Assirians londe. These shall come, and shal light all in the valeyes, in $\dot{y}$ vowtes of stone, vpon all grene thinges, and in all corners.

At the same tyme shal the LORDE shaue the hayre of the heade and the fete and the beerd clene of, with the rasoure that he shall paye them withall beyonde the water: namely, with y kynge of the Assirians. At the same tyme shall a man lyue with a cowe, and two shepe. Then because of the aboundaunce of mylck, ${ }^{d}$ he shal make butter and eat it. So that euery one which remayneth in the londe, shal eate butter and hony. At the same tyme all vynyardes (though there be a thousand vynes in one, and were solde for a thousand siluerlinges) shalbe turned to brears and thornes. Like as they shal come in to the londe with arowes and bowes, so shal all the londe become brears and thornes. And as for all hilles that now are hewen downe, thou shalt not come vpō them, for feare of brears and thornes. But the catel shal be dryuen thither, and the shepe shal fede there.

MOROUER the LORDE sayde vnto me: ${ }^{e}$ Take the a greate leaf, and wryte in it, as men do with a penne, that he spede him to robbe, and haist him to spoyle. And Inmediatly I called vnto me faithful wytnesses: Vrias the prest, and Zacharias $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Barachias. After that went I vnto the prophetisse, that now had conceaued and borne a sonne. Then sayde the LORDE to me: geue him this name: Maherschalal haschbas, that is. a spedie robber, an hastie spoyler. For why, or euer the childe shal haue knowlege to saye: Abi and Im, y is father, and mother: shal y riches of Damascus and $\dot{y}$ substaunce of Santaria be takē awaye, thorow the kynge of y Assirians.

The LORDE spake also vnto me, sayenge: ${ }^{R}$ for so moch as the people refuseth the stilrenninge water of Silo, and put their delite in Rezin and Romelies sonne: Beholde, the LORDE shal bringe mightie and great floudes of water vpon them : namely, ${ }^{h} \mathrm{y}$ kynge of the of O Emanuel. Go together ye people, and gather you, herken to all ye of farre countrees. Mustre you, and gather you: mustre you and gather you, take youre councel together, "yet must youre councel come to nought : go in honde withal, yet shal it not prospere. Excepte Emanuel: (that is God) be with us. For the LORDE chastised me, and toke me by $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ honde, and warned me, sayenge vnto nie: that I shulde not walcke in the waye of this people. He sayde morouer: rounde with none of the , who so ener saye: youder people are bounde together. ${ }^{b}$ Neuertheles feare them not, nether be afrayde of them, but sanctifie the LORDE of hoostes, let him be youre feare and drede. For he is the sanctifienge, and stone to stomble at, $\hat{y}$ rock to fall vpon, a snare and net to both the houses: to Israel, and the inhabitours of Ierusalem. And many shal stomble, fall, and be broke vpon him: yee they shalbe snared and taken.

Thus 1 waite rpon the LORDE, that hath turned his face from the house of Iacob, and I loke vito him. ${ }^{d}$ But lo, as for me, and the children which the LORDE hath genen me: we are a token and a wondre in Israel, for the LORDE of hoostes sake, which dwelleth ypon the hill of Syon.

'Yf eny man want light, let him loke vpon the lawe and the testimony, whether they speake not after this meanynge. Yf he do not this, he stombleth and suffreth hinger. And yf he suffre honger, he is out of pacience, and blasphemeth his kynge and his God. Then loketh he vpwarde, and downe warde to the earth, and EUEN like as in tyme past it hath bene well sene, ${ }^{f}$ that $\dot{y}$ londe of Zabulon and the londe of Nepthali (where thorow the see waye goeth ouer lordane in to the londe of Galilee) " was at the first in litle trouble, but afterward sore vexed.

Neuertheles ${ }^{\circ}$ people that haue dwelt in darcknesse, shal se a greate light. As for them that dwel in the londe of the shadowe of death, vpon them shal the light shyne. Shalt thou multiplie the people, and not increase the ioye also? "They shal reioyse before the euen as men make mery in haruest, and as men that haue gotten the victory, when they deale the spoyle. For thou shalt breake the yocke of the peoples burthen: the staff of hys shulder, 'and the rod of his oppressoure, as in ý daye at Madiā.

Morouer all temerarious and sedicious power (yee where there is but a cote fyled with bloude) shalbe burnt, and fede the fyre. For vito us a childe shalbe borne, ${ }^{k}$ and vnto us a sonne shalbe geuē. Vpō his shulder shal the kyngdome lye, and he shalbe called with his owne name: 'The wöderous geuer of councel, the mightie God, the euerlastinge father the prynce of peace, he shal make no ende to encrease the kyngdome and peace, and shal syt vpon the seate of Dauid and in his kyngdome, to set yp the same, to stablish it with equyte and rightuousnesse, from thence forth for euermore. This shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe.

The LORDE sent a worde in to lacob, the same is come in to Israel. All the people also of Ephraim, and they that dwel in Samaria, can saye with pryde and hie stomackes, on this maner: The tyle worcke is fallen downe, but we will buylde it with harder stones. The Molbery tymbre ys broken, but we shal set it vp agayne with Cedre. Neuertheles, the LORDE shal prepare Rezin the enemie agaynst the, and so ordre their aduersaries, that $\dot{y}$ Sirians shal laye holde vpon [^547]them before, and the Philistynes behynde, and so deuoure Israel with open mouth.

After all this, the ${ }^{a}$ wrath of the LORDE shal not ceasse, but yet his hande shalbe stretched out still. For the people turneth not vnto him, that chastiseth them, nether do they seke the LORDE of hoostes. Therfore the LORDE shal rote out of Israel both heade and tale, braunch and twygge in one daye. By the heade, is vnderstonde the Senatoure and honorable man, and by $\mathfrak{y}$ tale, the prophet that preacheth lyes. For all they which enfourme the people that they be in a right case, soch be disceauers. Soch as men thynke also to be perfecte amonge these, are but cast awaye.
D Therfore shal the LORDE haue no pleasure in their yonge mē, nether fauoure their fatherlesse and wydowes. For thei are altogether ypocrites and wicked, and all their mouthes speake foly. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath ceasse, but yet his honde shalbe stretched out still. For the vngodly burne, as a fyre in the bryers and thornes: And as it were out of a fyre in a wod or a redebush, so ascendeth the smoke of their pryde.

For this eause shal $\dot{y}$ wrath of the LORDE of hoostes fall rpon the londe, and the people shalbe consumed, as it were with fyre, no man shal spare his brother. If a man do turne him to the right honde, he shal famesh, or to the lefte hande to eat, he shal not haue ynough. Euery man shal eate the flesh of his owne arme: Manasses shal eate Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasses, and they both shal eate Iuda. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath ceasse, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

What will ye do in tyme of the visitacion and destruction, that shal come from farre? To whom will ye renne for helpe? or [^548]to whom will ye geue youre honoure, that he maye kepe it? that ye come not amonge the presoners, or lye amonge the deed? 'After all this shal not the wrath of the LORDE ceasse, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

${ }^{d}$ Wo be also vnto Assur, which is a staff of my wrath, in whose honde is the rod of my punyshment. For I shal sende him amonge those ypocritish people, amonge the people that haue deserued my disfanoure shal I send him : that he maye utterly robbe them, spoyle them, and treade them downe like the myre in the strete. Howbeit his meanynge is not so, nether thinketh his harte of this fashion. But he ymagineth only, how he maye ouerthrowe and destroye moch people, for he saieth: are not my princes all kynges? Is not Calno as easie to wynne, 'as Charchamis? Is it harder to conquere Antiochia then Arphad? Or is it lighter to ouereome Damascus the Samaria? As who say: I were able to wynne the kingdome of the Idolaters and their goddes, but not lerusalem and Samaria. Shal I not do vinto Ierusalem and their ymages, as I dyd vnto Samaria and their ynages?

Wherfore the LORDE saieth: As soone as I hane perfourmed my whole worcke vpon the Hyl of Syon and Ierusalem : the will I also vyset the noble and stoute kynge of Assiria, with his wysdome and pryde. For he stondeth thus in his owne cōceate: ${ }^{\prime}$ This do I, thorow the power of myne orme honde, and thorow my wisdome: For I am wyse, I am he that remoue the londes of the people, I robbe their prynces: and (like one of the worthies) I dryue them from their hie seates. My honde hath founde ont the hoostes of the people, as it were a nest. And like as egges, that were layde here and there, are gathered together: So do 1 gather all countrees. For though thy people (o Israel) be as the sonde of the see, yet shal but the remnaunt of them only conuerte vnto him. Perfecte is the iudgmét of him that floweth in rightuousnesse: and therfore $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE of hoostes shal perfectly fulfil the thinge, that he hath determyned in the myddest of the whole worlde. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God of hoostes: Thou my people, that dwellest in Sion, be not afrayde for the kinge of the Assirians: He shal wagg his staff at the, yee and beate the with the rodd, as the Egiptiäs dyd sometyme: But soone after, shal my wrath and my indignacion be fulfylled agaynst their blasphemies.

For he shal not geue sentēce, after the thinge $\frac{t}{y}$ shal be brought before his eies, nether reproue a matter at the first hearinge: but with rightousnesse shal he indge the poore, and with holynes shal he refourme the symple of the worlde.
${ }^{f}$ He shal smyte $\hat{y}$ worlde with $\hat{y}$ staff of his mouth, a with $\frac{f}{y}$ breath of his mouth shal he slaye the wicked. ${ }^{g}$ Rightuousnesse shalbe the gyrdle of his loynes, treuth and faithfulnesse the gyrdinge vp of his raynes. For the earth shalbe ful of $\mathfrak{y}$ knowlege of $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE, euen as though the water of the see flowed ouer the earth.

Then shal the Gentiles enquere after the rote of Iesse (which shalbe set vp for a token vnto the Gentiles) for his dwellinge shalbe glorious. "At the same tyme shal the LORDE take in honde agayne, 'to conquere y remnaunt [^551]of his people (which are lefft alyue) From the Assiriās, Egiptians, Arabians, Morians, Elamites, Caldeyes, Antiochiās and Ilōdes of the see. "And he shal set vp a tokē amonge the Gentiles, and gather together y y dispersed of lsrael, yee and the outcastes of Iuda from the foure corners of $\hat{y}$ worlde. The hatred of Ephrain, and $\hat{y}$ enmyte of Iuda shalbe clene

Ephraim shal beare no euel wil to Iuda, and luda shal not hate Ephraim: but they both together shal flye vpo the shulders of the Philistynes toward the West, and spoyle them together that dwell toward the East. The Idumytes and the Moabites shal let their hödes fall, and the Ammonites shalbe obedient vnto them.

The LORDE also shal cleue the tunges of the Egipciās see, and with a mightie wynde shal he lift vp his honde ouer Nilus, and shal smyte his seuē streames and make men go ouer drye shod. And thus shal he make a waye for his people, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ remayneth from the Assirians, ${ }^{b}$ like as it happened to y Israelites, what tyme they departed out of the londe of Egipte.

The worthies also of Moab bleared and cried for very sorow of their myndes: Wo is my hert for Moabs sake. They fled vnto the cite of Zoar, which is like a fayre fruteful bullock, they went vp to Luhith, wepinge. The waye toward Horonaim was ful of lamentacion for $y$ hurte. The waters of Nimrim were dried vp , the grasse was wythred, the herbes destroyed, what necessary grene thinge there was besyde. ## Che rir. Chapter.

${ }^{8}$ THIS is the heuy burthen vpon Egipte: ${ }^{a}$ Beholde, the LORDE wil ryde ypon a swifte clonde, and come in to Egipte. And the goddes of Egipte shal trymble at his comynge, and the hert of Egipte shal quake within her. For thus saieth the LORDE: I wil stere up the Egiptians one agaynst another amonge them selues, ${ }^{b}$ so that one shalbe euer agaynst his brother and neghboure, yee one cite agaynst another, and one kyngdome agaynst another. And Egipte shalbe choked in hir self. Whē they axe councel at their goddes, at their Prophetes, at their soythsayers and witches: then will I bringe their councel to naught.

I wil delyuer Egipte also in to the hondes of greuous rulers, and a cruel kinge shal haue the rule of them. The water of the see shalbe drawé out, Nilus shal synke awaye, a be dronke vp. The ryuers also shalbe drawen out, the welles shal decreace and drie awaye. Rede and rush shal fayle, the grasse by the waters syde or vpon $\mathfrak{y}$ ryuers bancke, yee and what so euer is sowen by the waters, shalbe wythered, destroyed, a brought to naught. The fyshers shall mourue, all soch as cast angles in the water, shal complayne, a they that sprede their nettes in the water, shalbe faynt harted. Soch as laboure vpon flax a sylcke, shal come to pouerte, $\pi$ they also that weeue fyne workes. All the poundes of Egipte, all the polieie of their Moates diches shal come to naught. ${ }^{\text {c }}$

Yee the vndiscrete prynces of Zoan, the ${ }^{d}$ councel of the wyse Senatours of Pharao, shal turne to foolishnesse: Those that darre boast © saye of Pharaos behalfe: I am come of wyse people. I am come of $\mathfrak{y}$ olde regall Progeny. But where are now thy wyse me? Let them tel the a shewe the, what the LORDE of hoostes hath taken in honde agaynst Egypte. Fooles are those prynces of Zoan, a proude are the prynces of Noph: yee they ${ }^{e}$ dysceaue Egypte with the nobilite of their stocke. For the LORDE hath made Egypte droncke with the sprete of erroure, and they shal vse it in all matters: eué like as a dronkē mā goeth spewinge aboute. For Egipte shal lacke good councel, so $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ they [^556]shal not knowe what to do, nether begimnynge nor ende, nether vpon the lode nor water. Thë shal $\dot{y}$ Egiptiās be like vnto womé, afrayde a astoied, at the liftinge vp of the hōde, which \cline { 1 - 1 } LORDE of hoostes shal lifte vp ouer them.

The Jonde of Iuda also shal make the Egiptians afrayde, who so doth but speake vpon it, shal put them in feare: And that because of the councel, which y LORDE of hoostes hath devysed agaynst them. Then shal the fyue cities of Egipte speake with the Canaanites tunge, ande sweare by the LORDE of hoostes, a Heliopolis shalbe one of them. At the same tyme shal the LORDE of hoostes haue an aulter in the myddest of the londe of Egipte, with this title ther by: Vnto the LORDE. This shalbe a token or testimony ${ }^{\prime}$ vnto the LORDE of hoostes in the londe of Egipte, when they shal crie vnto him, because of those that oppresse them: that he shal sende them a captayne and a Sauioure to delyuer them.

Morouer, Egipte shalbe bought vnto the LORDE, and the Egiptians also shal knowe the LORDE at the same tyme : they shal do him reuerence with peace offringes, and with meat offriuges: they shal promyse him offringes, yee a paye him also. Thus the LORDE shal smyte Egipte, © heale it agayne: a so shal they turne to y LORDE, and he also shal have mercy rpo them, and saue them. Then shal there be a comon waye out of Egipte in to Assiria. The Assirians shal come in to Egipte, and the Egypcians in to Assiria. The Egipcians also and the Assirians shal both haue one Gods seruyce. Then shal Israel with honoure be the thirde to Egipte and Assur. And the LORDE of hoostes shal blesse them, sayenge: Blissed is my people of the Egipcians, Assur is the worke of my hōdes, but lsrael is myne enheritaunce.

TTHE same yeare that Harthan came to Aschdod, where Sarge the kinge of the Assirians sent him, what tyme as he also beseged Aschdod, © wāne it $\dot{y}$ same season: 'Thē spake the LORDE vnto Esaye $f$ sonne of Ainos, sayenge: go and lowse of $\dot{y}$ sack cloth frō thy loynes, and put of thy shues from thy [^557]fete. And so he dyd, goinge naked $\tau$ barefote. Then sayde the LORDE: where as my seruaunt lisaye goeth naked and barefote, it is a token and signifienge of the thinge, that after thre yeare shal come rpo Egipte and Ethiopia. For euen thus shal the kinge of the Assirians driue both yonge and olde, as prisoners naked and barelote, out of Egipte and Ethiopia, $\mathbf{x}$ And shal dyseoner $\hat{y}$ shame of Egipte. They shalbe also at their wittes ende, and ashamed one of another: the Egipecians of the Moryans, and the Morians of the Egipcians, at the sight of their glory:

Moroner they that dwel in $\frac{f}{y}$ Iles shal saye enen the same daye: beholde, this is oure hope, to whom we fled to seke helpe, that we might be delyuered from the kinge of $\dot{y}$ Assirians. Ilow will we escape?

THls is the heuy burthe of the waist see: A greuous visiō was shewed vnto me, like as when a storme of wynde and rayne russheth in from the wyldernesse, that terrible londe. Who so maye disceaue (sayde the voyce) let him disceaue: Who so maye distroye, let him distroye. Vp Elam, besege it o Madai, for I will still all their gronynges. With this, the raynes of my backe were ful of payne: ${ }^{a}$ Panges came vpon me, as vpon a woman in hir trauayle. When I herde it, I was abasshed: and whe I loked vp, I was afrayde. Myne herte paunted, I trembled for feare. The darcknesse made me fearfull in my mynde.

Yee soone make redy the table (sayde this voyce) kepe the watch, eate and drynke: Vp ye captaynes, take you to youre shylde, for thus the LORDE hath charged me: go thy waye, and set a watchmā, that he maye tell what he seyth. And whe he had wayted diligetly, he sawe two horsmen: the one rydinge vpon an Asse, the other vpon a camel. And the lyon eried: LORDE, I have stonde waytinge all the whole daye, and haue kepte my watch all the night. With $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ came there one rydinge upon a charet, which answered, and sayde: "Babilon is fallen, she is turned upsyde downe, and all $\dot{f}$ ymages of hir goddes are smytten to y grounde. One of Seir eried vato me: "watchman, what hast thou espied by night? Watchman, what hast thou espied by night? The watchman answered: 'The daye breaketh on, and the night is eōmynge: If youre request be earnest, then axe, and come agayne.

The heuy burthen vpon Arabia.
${ }^{d}$ At euen ye shal abyde in the wod, in the waye toward Dedanim. Mete the thurstie with water, (o ye citisens of Hema) mete those with bred that are fled. For thei shal runne awaye from the weapen, from the drawe swerde, from the bett bowe, and from the greate batell. For thus hath the LORDE spoken mito me: ouer a yeare shal all the power of Cedar be gone, like as when the office of an hyred seruaunte goeth out: And the remnaunt of the good Archers of Cedar, ${ }^{\text {e }}$ shalbe very few: For the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken it.

The heuy burthen, apon the valley of Visions.

WHAT hast thou there to do, that thou elymnest vp in to the house toppe, o thou citie of miracles, sedicious and wilfull? scinge, thy slayne me are nether killed with swerde, ner deed in batel? For all thy eaptaynes gat them to their horses from the ordinaunce, yee they are altogether rydden awaye, and fled farre of. When I perceaued $\frac{\stackrel{y}{y} \text {, I }}{}$ sayde: awaye fro me, $\frac{t}{y}$ I maye wepe bytterly. 'Take no laboure for to cōforte me, as touchinge the destruction of my people. For this is $\dot{y}$ daye of the LORDE of hoostes, wherin he will plage, treade downe, and wede out the valley of $V$ isios, and breake downe the walles, with soch a crack, that it shal geue a sownde in the mountaynes.

I sawe the Elamites take the quyuers to carte and to horse, and that the walles were bare from harnesse. Thy goodly valleys were ful of Charettes, the horse men made them soone to besege the gates. Then was the coueringe of luda put from thence, and then was sene the sege of the tymbre house. There shal ye se the riftes in the walles of the cite of [^559]Dauid, ${ }^{a}$ wherof there shalbe many. Ye shal gather together the waters of the lower pole, and tel the houses of Ierusale, and break of some of thē to kepe $\dot{y}$ walles. And ye shal make a pyt betwyxte $f$ twayne walles of the water of the olde pole, and nothinge regarde him, that toke it in honde and made it. And at the same tyme shal $\%$ LORDE of hoostes $\mathrm{cal} m \overline{\mathrm{c}}$ to wepinge mourninge, to baldnesse and puttinge on of sack clothe. But they to fulfil their lust and wilfulnes, slaughter oxē, they kyll shepe, they eate costly meate, $x$ drynke wyne: ${ }^{b}$ let vs eate and drinke, tomorow we shal die. Neuertheles whe the LORDE of hoostes herde of it, he sayde: yee, yf this wickednes of yours shalbe remitted, ye must die for it. This hath ${ }^{8}$ LORDE God of hoostes spoken. ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Go in to the treasury vnto Sobna the gouernoure, and saye vnto him: What hast thou here to do? from whece comest thou? that thou hast made the a graue here? For he had caused a costly tombe of stone to be made for himself, and a place to lye in to be hewen out of a rock. Beholde the LORDE shal cast the out by violence, he will deck the of another fashion, and put vpon the a straunge clothe. He shal carie y in to a farre coūtre, like a ball with his hondes. There shalt thou die, there shal the pompe of thy charettes haue an ende: thou vylleyne of the house of thy LORDE: I wil shute the out of thine office, and put the from thine estate.

After this wil I cal my seruaunt Eliakim, $\mathfrak{y}$ somne of Helkia, and araye him with thy cote, and gyrde him with thy gyrdle, and I wil geue thy power in to his honde. He shalbe a father of the citisens of lerusalem, ${ }^{d}$ and of the Kymred of Iuda. I will also laye the keye of Dauids house vpon his shulders, and yf he open, no man shal shit, and yf he do shyt, no man shal open. I wil fasten him to a nale in the place of the most hie faithfulnesse, ${ }^{e}$ and he shalbe vpon the glorious trone of his fathers house. They shal häge vpon him all the glory of his fathers house, of the children and childers childrē, all apparel small and great, all instrumentes of measure $\pi$ musike. AN heuy burthen vpon Tirus. Mourne ye shippes of 'Tharsis, for she is throwne downe to the grounde, and conquered of them, that are come from Cithim. The Indwellers of the Ilondes, the marchanntes of Sidon, and they that occupied the see (of whom thou wast ful somtyme) are at a poynte. For by see were there frutes brought vito the, and all maner of corne by water. Thou wast the comon mareket of al people. Sidō is sory for it, yee and all $\hat{y}$ power of the see coplaneth, and saieth: O y I had neuer traueled with childe, that I had neuer bome eny, $\frac{t}{y}$ I had nether norished boye, ner brought vp doughter. As soone as Egipte perceaneth it, she wilbe as sory as Tirus it self. Go ouer the see, Mourne ye $\frac{t}{y}$ dwel in the lles. Is not that the glorious cite, which hath bene of longe antiquite? whose natyues dwellinge farre of, commende her so greatly? Who hath deuysed soch thinges ypon 'Tirus the erowne of al cities, whose marchantes and eaptaynes were the highest and prineipal of the worlde? Euee the LORDE of hoostes hath deuysed it, that he maye put downe al pompe, and minish all the glory of the worlde. Go thorow thy londe ( ${ }^{5}$ o thou doughter of the see) as men go ouer the water, and there is not a gyrdle more.
${ }^{4}$ Thus the LORDE (that remoueth the kingdomes, and hath taken in hande agaynst that mightie Canaan to rote it out:) hath stretched out his honde ouer the see, and sayde: From hence forth shalt thou make no more myrth (o thou doughter Silon) for thou shalt be put downe of the Cethēs. Stonde vp therfore, and go where the enemie wil carie the, where thou shalt also hane no rest. Beholde (for thyne ensample:) The Caldees were soch a people, that no man was like them. Assur buylded them: he set vp his eastels (I) palaces, and broke them downe agayne. And therfore mourne (ye shippes of the see) for youre power shalbe throwne downe.

After that, shal the lxx. yeares of Tirus (euen as longe as their kinges life was) be forgotten. And after lxx. yeares, it shal happe to Tirus as with an harlot that playeth vpon a lute. Take thy lute (saie men to her) and go aboute the citie, thou art yet an vnknowne wensehe, make pastyme with dyuerse balettes, wherby thou mayest come in to acquantaunce. 'Thus shal it happen after lxx. yeares. " The LORDE shal uiset the citie of Tirus, and it shal come agayne to hyr Marchaundyse, and shal occupie with al the Kingdomes that be in the worlde. But all hir occupiége and wynnynge, shalbe halowed vnto the LORDE. ${ }^{\text {b }}$ For then shal they laye vp nothinge behinde them nor vpon heapes: but the marchaidise of Tirus shal belöge vnto the citisens of the LORDE, to the fedinge and susteninge of the hugrie, and to the clothinge of the aged.

$\mathfrak{a} B$EHOLDE, $\dot{y}$ LORDE shal waist and plage the worlde, 'he shal make the face of the earth desolate, a scatre abrode $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ inhabitours therof. The earth shalbe heuye and decaye: The face of $\hat{y}$ earth shal perish $\mathbb{f}$ fal awaye, the proude people of $\dot{y}$ worlde shal come to naught, For $\dot{y}$ earth is corrupte of hir indwellers.

The swete wyne shal mourne, the grapes shalbe weake, and all $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ haue bene mery in harte, shal sighe. ${ }^{d}$ The myrth of tabrettes shalbe layde downe, the chere of the ioyful shal ceasse, and the pleasure of lutes shal haue an ende: there shal no more wyne be dronke with myrtl, the beer shal be bytter to the that drinke it, the wicked cities shalbe broken downe, all houses shalbe shut, that no man maye come in.

In the stretes shal there be lift vp a crie

because of wyne, all mens chere shal vanish awaye, and all ioye of the earth shal passe. Desolacion shal remayne in the cities, and the gates shalbe smytten with waistnesse. For it shal happen vnto all londes and to all people, like as when a mā smyteth downe $\mathfrak{y}$ olyues, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ are left vpon the tre: ${ }^{\epsilon}$ or seketh after grapes, when the wyme gatheringe is out. And those same (that remayne) shal lift vp their voyce, and be glad, a shal magnifie the glory of the LORDE, euen from the see, a prayse the name of the LORDE God of Israel, in the valcis and Ilōdes. We heare songes sunge to the prayse of the rightuous, fro al the endes of the worlde. Therfore I must speake: O my vnfrutfulnesse, o my pouerte, Wo is me, all is ful of synneres, which offende of purpose and malice. And therfore, (o thou that dwellest ypon the earth) there is at hode for the, feare, pyt and snare. Who so escapeth the terrible crie, shal fall in to the pyt. ${ }^{f}$ And yf he come out of the pyt, he shalbe take with the snare. For the wyndowes aboue shalbe opened, and the foundacion of the earth shal moue.

The earth shal geue a greate crack, it shal haue a sore ruyne, and take an horrible fall. The earth shal stacker like a dronken man, and be take awaye like a tent. Hir misdedes shal lie so heuye vpō her, $\stackrel{+}{y}$ she must fall, and neuer rise vp agayne. At the same tyme shal the LORDE mustre together the hie hooste aboue, and $\mathfrak{y}$ kynges of the worlde vpon the earth. These shalbe coupled together as prisoners be, and shalbe shut in one warde and punished innumerable daies. ${ }^{5}$ The Moone and the Sonne shalbe ashamed, when the LORDE of hoostes shal rule them at lerusalem vpon the mount Sion, before and with his excellent councel.

The rub. Chapter.

OLORDE, thou art my God, I wil prayse the, and magnifie thy name: For thou bringest marvelous thinges to passe, acordinge to thine olde councels, truly and stedfastly. ${ }^{h}$ Thou makest of townes, heapes of stone: and of head cities, broken walles: The palaces of the wicked destroyest thou out of the citie, that they shal neuer be buylded againe. Therfore the very rude people must magnifie the, and the cities of the cruel heithen must feare the. For thou art the poore mans helpe, a [^561]strēgth for the neadful in his necessite. Thou art a defence agaynst euel wether, a schadowe agaynst the hete. But vnto the presumptuous, thou art like a stroge whyrle wynde, that casteth downe the boostinge of the vngodly, thou kepest men from heate with the shadow of the cloudes, thou cuttest of the braunches of tyrauntes.

Morouer the LORDE of hoostes shal once prepare a feast for all people vpō the hill: ${ }^{a} \mathrm{~A}$ plenteous, costly, pleasaunt feast, of fat and welfed beastes, of swete and most pure thinges. Vpon the hill shal he take awaye the syde vale $\frac{t}{y}$ hägeth before $\stackrel{f}{\mathrm{y}}$ face of al people, and the coueringe wherwith all Gentiles are couered. ${ }^{6}$ As for death, he shal vtterly cōsume it, The LORDE God shal wipe awaye the teares from all faces, and take awaye the confucio of his people thorow $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ whole worlde. For y LORDE himself hath sayde it.

At the same tyme shal it be sayde: lo, this is oure God in whō we put oure trust, ${ }^{c}$ and he hath healed vs. This is the LORDE that we haue wayted for: Let vs reioyse a delyte in his health. For the hōde of $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE ceaseth vpō this hil. But Nİoab shalbe throsshē downe vnder him, like as the straw is trode under fete in a dōge hill. For he shal stretch out his hōdes vpon him, like as a swimmer doth to swymme. And with the power of his hondes shal he cast downe his hie pompe. As for his stroge holdes a hie walles: he shal buwe them, cast the downe, and fell the to the grounde in to dust.

And therfore make no mockes at it, that youre captinyte increase not: for I haue herde the LORDE of hoostes saye, that there shal come a soden destruction and plage ypon the whole earth. As for the wheate, he gryndeth it to make bred therof, In as moch as he can not bringe it to passe with treadinge out. For nether the brussinge that the cart wheles make, ner his beastes can grynde it. This and soch like thinges come of the LORDE of hostes which is maruelous in councel, and greate in rightuousnesse.

WO be to those shrenkinge children (saieth the LORDE) ${ }^{5}$ which seke councel, but not at me: which take a webbe in honde, but not after my will: that they maye heape one synne vpon another. They go downe in to Egipte, (and axe me no councel) to seke helpe at the power of Pharao, and cöforte in the shadowe of the Egipciàs. But Pharaos helpe shalbe youre cōfucion, and the comforte in the Egipcians shadowe shalbe youre owne shame. Youre rulers haue bene at Zoan, and youre messaungers came vnto Hanes. ${ }^{\text {h }}$ But ye shal all be ashamed of the people ${ }^{\dot{y}}$ maye not helpe you, which shal not bringe you strength or comforte, but shame and confucion.

Youre beastes haue borne burthens vpō their backes towarde the South, thorow the waye that is ful of parell and trouble, because of the lyo and lyones, of the Cockatrice and shutynge dragon. Yee the Mules bare youre substaunce, and the Camels brought youre treasure vpon their croked backes, vito a people that can not helpe you. For the Egipeians helpe shalbe but vane and lost. Therfore I tolde you also $\stackrel{t}{y}$ youre pryde shulde haue an ende. IN the xiiij. yeare of kinge Ezechias, ${ }^{g}$ came Sennacherib kinge of the Assirians downe, to laye sege ynto all the stronge cities of Iuda. And the kinge of the Assirias sent Rabsaches from Lachis toward Ierusalem, agaynst kinge Ezechias, with a gremous hooste, which set him by the condite of the ouerpole, in the waye that goeth thorow y fullers lōde. And so there came forth vnto him Eliachim ${ }^{4} \mathrm{Hel}$ chias sonne the presydent, Sobna the scribe, and Ioah Asaphs sonne the Secretary.

And Rabsaches sayde vnto them: Tel Ezechias, that the greate kinge of Assiria sayeth thus vnto him: What presumpeion is this, that thou trustest vnto? Thou thinkest (peraduēture) that thou hast councel $\mathbb{\nwarrow}$ power ynough, to mayntene this warre: or els wher to trustest thou, that thou castest thi self of fro me? lo, Thon puttest thy trust in a broken staff of rede ${ }^{2}$ (I meane Egipte) which he that leaneth vjon, it goeth in to his honde $₫$ shuteth him thorow. Euen so is Pharao the kinge of Egipte, vnto all the that trust in him. But yf thou woldest saye to me: We trust in $\dot{y}$ LORDE oure God: A goodly god, in dede : whose hie places a aulteres Ezechias toke downe, and commaunded Iuda and lerusalem, to worshipe only before the aulter. Abyde the, thou hast made a condicion with my lorde the kinge of the Assiriās, that he shulde geue the two thousande horses: Art thou able to set me there $v p$ ? Seinge now that thou canst not resist the power of the smallest prynce that my lorde hath, how darrest thou trust in y charettes and horse men of Egipte? will? The LORDE sayde vito me: go downe in to that londe, that thou mayest destroye it.
Then sayde Eliachim, Sobna đ Iohah vnto Rabsaches: Speake to vs thy seruauntes (we praye the) in the Sirians language, for we vnderstonde it well: And speake not to vs in the Iewes tunge, lest the folcke heare, which lieth ypon the wall. Then answered liabsaches: Thinke ye, $\frac{t}{y}$ the kinge sent me to speake this only rito you? Hath he not sent me to the also, that lie vpō the wall? that they be not copelled to eate their owue donge, and drinke their owne stale with you?

Aud Rabsaches stode stiff, © cried with a loude voyce in the Iewes tüge, and sayde: Now take hede, how the greate kinge of the Assiriais geueth you warnynge. Thus saieth the kinge: Let not Ezechias disceaue you, for he shal not be able to delyuer you. Morouer, let not Ezechias comforte you in the LORDE, when he saieth: The LORDE with out doute shal defende vs, © shal not geue ouer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of the Assiriās, beleue him not. But thus saieth the kinge of Assiria: optesne my fauoure, enclyne to me: So maye euery mă enioye his vynyardes and fygetrees, and drinke the water of his cisterne : vnto the tyme that I come myself, \& bringe you in to a londe, $\frac{ \pm}{y}$ is like youre owne: wher in is wheat and wyne, which is both sowen with sede, and planted with vynyardes. Let not Ezechias disceaue you, when he sayeth vnto you: the LORDE shal delyuer us.
${ }^{\text {a }}$ Night the goddes of the Gentiles kepe euerymans londe, from the power of the kinge of the Assirians? Wher is the God of hemath I Arphad? Where is the God of Sepharnaim? And who was able to defende Samaria out of my honde? Or which of all the goddes of the lödes, hath deliuered their countre out of my power, so that the LORDE shulde delyuer Terusalem fro my honde? Vnto this, Ezechias messaungers helde their tunges, and answered not one worde: for the kinge had charged them, that they shulde geue him none answere. So came Eliachim Elchias sonne the presidèt, Sobna the scrybe, and loah Asaphs soune the Secretary, vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, a tolde him the wordes of Rabsaches.

 HEN Ezechias herde that, he rente his clothes, ${ }^{,}$đ put on a sack cloth, đ went[^571]in to the temple of the LORDE. But he sent Eliachim the Presidēt, Sobna the scrybe with the eldest prestes cloothed in sack, ${ }^{c}$, nto the Prophet Esay the sonue of Amos, a they sayde vnto him: Thus saieth Ezechias: this is the daye of trouble, of plage a of wrath: like as when a childe cometh to the byrth, but the woman hath no power to bringe it forth. The LORDE thy God (wo doute) hath well considered the wordes of Rabsaches, whom his lorde $\mathfrak{y}$ kinge of the Assirians hath sent, to defie r blaspheme the lyuynge God: with soch wordes, as the LORDE thy God hath herde right well. And therfore lift vp thy prayer for the remnaunt, that yet are left. So the seruauntes of kinge Ezechias came to Esay.

And Esay gaue them this answere: Saie thus vnto youre lorde: thus saieth the LORDE: Be not afrayde of the wordes that thou hast herde, wherwith the kinge of Assiriãs seruauntes haue blasphemed me. Beholde, I will cause a wynde go ouer him, ${ }^{d}$ as soone as he heareth it, he shal go agayne in to his countre, there will I distroye him with the swerde. 'Now when Rabsaches returned, he founde $\hat{y}$ kinge of Assiria layenge sege to Lobna, for he had vuderstonde, that he was departed from Lachis. For there came a rumoure, $\dot{y}$ Taracha kinge of Ethiopia was come forth to warre agaynst him.

And when the kinge of Assiria herde $\frac{f}{y}$, he sent other messaungers to kinge Ezechias, with this commaundement. Saye thus to Ezechias kinge of Iuda : Let not thy God disceaue the, in whom thou hopest, $\mathbb{\pi}$ sayest: Ierusale shal not be geue in to the hondes of the kinge of Assiria. For thou knowest well, how the kinges of Assiria haue handled all the londes, that they haue subnerted, © hopest thou to escape? Were the people of the Gétiles (whom my progenitours cöquered) deliuered at eny tyme thorow their goddes? As namely, Gozan, Haran, Rezeph, ${ }^{\prime}$ g the childree of Eden, which dwell at Thalassar. Where is the kinge of Hemath, a the kinge of Arphad, $\mathbb{a}$ the kinge of the citie Sepharnaim, Eua and Aua? Now when Ezechias had receaued $\dot{y}$ lettre of the messaungers, a red it, he went vp in to the house of the LORDE, a opened the lettre before $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE. And Ezechias prayed before the LORDE on this maner: O LORDE of hoostes, thou God of Israel, which dwellest Encline thine eare LORDE a cōsidre, open thine eyes (o LORDE, a se, and pondre all the wordes of Senacherib, which hath sent his embassage to blaspheme the, the lyuynge God. It is true (o LORDE) that the kinges of Assiria have cóquered all kingdomes a londes, a cast their goddes in the fyre. Notwithstodinge those were no goldes but the workes of mens hondes, of wodd or stone, therfore haue they destroyed them. Delyuer vs then (o LORIDE oure God) from the hondes of Sennacherib, $\dot{y}$ all kingdomes of the earth maye knowe, that thou only art $\dot{8}$ LORDE. Then Lisay the some of Amos sent vito Ezechias, sayenge: 'Thus saieth $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me, as touchinge Sennacherib, this is the answere, that the LORDE hath geuen concernynge him: Despised art thou, a mocked (o donghter of Sion) he hath shaken his heade at the, o donghter of lerusalem. ${ }^{\text {c }}$ But thou Sennacherib, whom hast thou defied or blasphemed? "And agaynst whō hast thou lifted 'p thy voyce, a exalted thy proude lokes? euen agaynst the holy one of Israel. They shalbe like the grasse a grene herbes in the felde, like the hay vpo house topres, that wythereth, afore it be growne vp.

I knowe thy wayes, thy goinge forth a thy comynge home, yee thy madnesse agaynst me. Therfore thy furiousnesse agaynst me, a thy pryde is come before me. 1 wil put a

And soch of the house of Iuda as are escaped, shal come together, and the remmaunt shal take rote beneth, a bringe forth frute aboue. For the escaped shal go out of lerusale, a the remnaunte from the mount Sion. And this shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE, concernynge the kinge of the Assirians: He shall not come in to the citie, and shal shute no arowe in to it, there shall no shilde hurte it, nether shal they graue aboute it. The same waye that he came, shal he returne, and not come at this citie, saieth the LORDE. And I wil kepe and saue the citie (saieth he) for myne owne, a for my seruaunte Dauids sake.

Thus the angel went forth, ${ }^{\circ}$ and slewe of the Assirians hooste, an clexxy. thousande. $f$ And when men arose yp early (at lerusale :) Beholde, all laye ful of deed bodies. BEHOLDE, the LORDES honde is not so shortened $\frac{y}{y}$ it can not helpe, ' nether is his eare so stopped $\frac{t}{y}$ it maye not heare. But youre myszdedes haue separated you from youre God, a youre synnes hyde his face from you, $\dot{y}$ he heareth you not. For youre houdes are defyled with bloude, ${ }^{*}$ and youre fyngers with mrighteousnesse: Youre lippes speake lesynges, a youre tonge setteth out wickednes. No man regardeth righteousnes, It no ma iudgeth truly. Euery man hopeth in vayne thinges, and ymagineth disceate, cōceaueth weerynesse, a bringeth forth euell. 'They brede cockatrice egges, $\tau$ weeue $\hat{y}$ spyders webb. Who so eateth of their egges, dieth. But yf one treade rpon thē, there cometh ip a serpent. ${ }^{p}$ Thy wayes and thy thoughtes, haue brought the vnto this, this is thyne owne wickednesse and disobediēece, that hath possessed thyne hert: Ah my bely, ah my bely, (shalt thou crie) how is my hert so sore? my hert paunt-

To do euell, they haue witt ynough: but to do well, they haue no wiszdome. I haue loked vpon the earth, and se, it is wayst and voyde. I loked towarde heauen, and it had no shyne.

I behelde the mountaynes, and they trembled, and all the hilles were in a feare. I loked aboute me, and there was no body, and all the byrdes of the ayre were awaye. I marked well, and the plowed felde was become waist: yee all their cities were broken downe at the presence of the LORDE, and indignacion of his wrath.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: The whole londe shalbe desolate, yet will I not then haue done. And therfore let the earth mourne, and let the heauen be sory aboue: for the thinge that I hane purposed and taken vpou me to do, shal not repente me, and I will not go from it. The whole londe shal fle, for the noyse of the horsmen and bowmen: they shall runne in to dennes in to woddes, and clymme vp the stony rockes. All the cities shalbe voyde, and no man dwellinge therin.

What wilt thou now do, thou beinge destroyed? ${ }^{c}$ For though thou clothest thy self with scarlet, a deckest $\mathfrak{y}$ with gold: though thou payntest thy face with colours, ${ }^{d}$ yet shalt thou trymme thy self in vayne.

For those that hither to haue bene thy greate fauourers, shal abhorre the, and go aboute to slaye y . LOKE thorow Ierusalem, beholde and se: Seke thorow hir stretes also within, yf ye can fynde one man, that doth equall and right, or that laboureth to be faithfull: and I shall spare him (saieth the LORDE). 'For though they can saye: the LORDE lyueth, yet do they sweare to disceaue: Where as thou (o LORDE) lokest only vpon faith and treuth.

Thou hast scourged them, but they toke no repentaunce: thou hast correcte them for amendemèt, but they refused thy correction. They made their faces harder then a stone, and wolde not amende.

Therfore I thought in my self: peraduenture they are so symple and folish, that they vnderstonde nothinge of the LORDES waye, ${ }^{f}$ and iudgmentes of oure God. Beholde, the tyme cometh (saieth the LORDE) that I wil vyset all them, whose foreskynne is vncircumcised: The Egipcians, "the Iewes, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the shauen Madianites, that dwel in the wildernes. ${ }^{6}$ For all $\dot{y}$ Gentiles are vucircumcised in the flesh, but all the house of Israel, are vncircumcised in the herte.

a 1EARE the worde of the LORDE, $\frac{\ell}{y}$ he speaketh vnto the, o thou house of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE: Ye shal not lerne after the maner of the Heithē, ${ }^{c}$ and ye shal not be afrayed for the tokens of heauen : for the Heithen are afrayed of soch: Yee all the customes and lawes of the Getiles are nothinge, but vanite. ${ }^{d}$ They hewe downe a tre in the wod with the hondes of the workeman, and fashion it with the axe: they couer it ouer with golde or syluer, they fasten it with nales and hammers, that it moue not. It stödeth as stiff as the palme tre, it can nether speake ner go, but must be borne. ${ }^{e}$ Be not ye afrayed of soch, for they cà do nether good ner euel. But there is none like vnto $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ (o LORDE) thou art greate, $f$ and greate is the name of thy power. Who wolde not feare the? or what kige of the Gentiles wolde not obeye the?

For amonge all the wysemen of the Gentiles, and in all their kingdomes, there is none, that maye be lickened vnto the. They are all together vnlerned and vnwise, All their connynge is but vanite : namely, wod, syluer, which is brought out of Tharsis, and beatē to plates: ${ }^{5}$ and golde from Ophir, a worke $\frac{t}{y}$ is made with the honde of the craftesman त the caster, clothed with yalow sylck and scarlet: euen so is the worke of their wyse men all together. But the LORDE is a true God, a lyuinge God, and an enerlastinge kinge. "If he be wroth, the carth shaketh: all the Getiles maye not abyde his indignacion.

As for their gordes, it maye well be sayde of the : they are goddes, that made nether heauē ner earth : therfore shal they perish frō the earth, and from all thinges vnder heanen.

' But (as for oure God) he made the earth with his power, and with his wisdome hath he fynished the whole compasse of the worlde, with his discrecion hath he spred out the heauens, At his voyce the waters gather together in the ayre, he draweth vp $\dot{y}$ cloudes from the vttemost partes of $y$ earth: " he turneth lighteninge to rayne, and brigeth forth the wyndes out of their treasuries: ${ }^{i} \mathrm{His}$ wisdome maketh all men fooles. And confunded be all casters of ymages, ${ }^{m}$ for that they cast, is but a vayne thinge, and hath no life. ${ }^{n}$ The vayne craftes men with their workes, that they in their vanite haue made, shall perish one with another in the tyme of visitacion. Neuerthcles, lacobs porciō is not soch : but it is he, that hath made all thinges, and Israel is the rodd of his inheritaūce: The LORDE of hoostes is his name. Put awaye thy vnclennesse out of the londe, thou that art in the stronge cities. For thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I wil now thrust out the inhabitours of this londe a greate waye off, and trouble them of soch a fashio, that they shal no more be founde.

Alas, how am I hurte? Alas, how panefull are my scourges vnto me? For I cōsidre this sorow by my self, it I must suffre it, My tabernacle is destroyed, and all my coardes are broken. My children are gone fro me, àd can no where be founde. Now haue I none to sprede out my tente, or to set yp my hanginges. For the hyrdmen haue done folishly, that they haue not sought the LORDE. Therfore haue they dealt vnwisely with their catell, t all are scatred abrode. Beholde, the noyse is harde at honde, and greate sedicio out of the north: to make the cities of luda a wyldernesse, and a dwellinge place for Dragons. - Now I knowe (o LORDE) that it is not in mās power to ordre his owne waies, or to rule his owne steppes a goinges. Therfore chastē thou is (o LORDE) but with fauoure, ${ }^{p}$ and not in thy wrath, bringe vs not vtterly to naught. Poure out thy indignacion rather vpon the Gētiles, that knowe $y$ not, and von the people that call not on thy name: And that becanse they haue consumed, deuoured and destroyed Iacob, and haue roted out his glory.

THIS is another Sermon, which the LORDE commaunded Ieremy for to preach, sayenge :

Heare the wordes of the couenaunt, and speake vnto all luda, and to all them that dwel at Ierusalem, And saye thou vnto the : Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel: Cursed be euery one, that is not obedient vnto $\dot{y}$ wordes of this conenant: which I commaunded vito youre fathers, what tyme as I brought them out of Egipte, from the yron fornace, sayenge: ${ }^{a} \mathrm{Be}$ obedient vnto my voyce, and do accordinge to all that I commaunde you: ${ }^{h}$ so shal ye be my people, and I wil be youre God, and will kepe my promyse, $\dot{y}$ I haue sworne vnto youre fathers: Namely, that I wolde geue them ${ }^{c}$ a londe which floweth with mylke and hony, as ye se, it is come to passe vito this daye.

Then answered I, and sayde: Amen. It is euen so LORDE, as thou sayest. Then the LORDE sayde vnto me agayne: Preach this in $\dot{y}$ cities off luda and rounde aboute Ierusalem, and saye: Heare the wordes off this couenaunt, that ye maye kepe them. For I haue diligently exorted youre fathers, euer sence the tyme that 1 brought them out off the Londe off Egipte, vnto this daye. I gaue them warnynge by tymes, sayenge:
5 herken vnto my voyce: ${ }^{d}$ Neuertheles, they wolde not obeye me, nor enclyne their eares snto me, ${ }^{\ell}$ but folowed the wicked ymaginacios of their owne hertes. And therfore haue I accused them as transgressours of all the wordes off this conuenaunt, that I gaue them to kepe, which they (notwithstōdinge) haue not kepte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: It is foude out, that whole Israel and all the citisens off Ierusalem are gone backe. They haue turned them selues to the blasphemies off their fore fathers, which had no lust to heare my worde. Euen likewise haue these also folowed straunge goddes, and worshipped them. The house off Israel and Iuda haue broken my couenaunt, which I made with their fathers.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: Be-holde, I will sende a plage amonge you, which ye shal not be able to escape: and though ye crie vnto me, I will not heare you. ${ }^{f}$ Thē shal the townes off Iuda and the eitisens off Ierusalem go, and call vpon their goddes, vnto whom they made their oblacios: ${ }^{g}$ but they are not able to helpe them in tyme off their trouble. ${ }^{h}$ For as many cities as thou hast (o luda) so many goddes hast thou also: 'And loke how many stretes there be in the (o Ierusalem) so many shameful aulters haue ye set vp, to offre vpon them vnto Baal. ${ }^{k}$ But praye not thou for this people, byd nether prayse ner prayer for them: for though they crie vnto me in their trouble, yet will I not heare them.

O thou beloued, why doest thou so shamefull greate blasphemies in my house? 'euen as though that holy flesh might absolue the, specially when thou hast made thy boost off thy wickednes. The LORDE called the a grene olyue tre, ${ }^{m}$ a fayre one, a frutefull one, a goodly one: but now that there is a contrary reporte off the abrode, he will burne the vp, ād destroye thy braunches. ${ }^{n}$ For the LORDE off hoostes that plated the, hath deuysed a plage for the (o thou house of Israel © Iuda) for ${ }^{\circ}$ euel that ye haue done, to prouoke him to wrath, in that ye dyd seruyce vnto Baal.

This (o LORDE) have I lerned of the, and viderstonde it, for thou hast shewed me their ymaginacions. ${ }^{\circ}$ But I (as a meke lambe) was caried awaye to be slayne: not knowinge, that they had deuysed soch a councel agaynst me, sayenge: ${ }^{p}$ We will destroye his meate with wod, and dryue him out of the londe of the lyuynge, that his name shal neuer be thought vpon. Therfore I will beseke the now (o LORDE of hoostes) ${ }^{q}$ thou rightuous iudge, thou that tryest the reynes and the hertes: let me se the auenged of them, for vnto the haue I committed my cause. The LORDE therfore spake thus of the citesens of Anothot, that sought to slaye me, sayège : Preach not unto vs in the name of the LORDE, or els thou shalt dye of oure hondes. Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I will viset you. Youre yonge mé shal perish with the swearde, youre sonnes and youre doughters shal vtterly dye of honger, [^621]so that none shal remayne. For ypon the citesyns off Anathot wil I bringe a plage, and the yeare of their visitacion.

" 0LORDE, thou art more rightuous, then that I shulde dispute with the: Neuertheles, let me talke with the in thinges reasonable. ${ }^{a}$ How happeneth it, that the waye off the rngodly is so prosperous? and that it goeth so wel with them, which (with out eny shame) offède and lyue in wickednesse? Thou plantest them, they take rote, they growe, and bringe forth frute. They boost moch off the, yet doest thou not punysh them. But thou LORDE (to whom I am well knowne) thou that hast sene, t proued my herte, take them awaye, like as a flock is caried to the slaughter house, ${ }^{b}$ and apoynte them for the daye off slaughtinge.

How longe shall the londe mourne, and all the herbes off the felde perish, for the wickednes off them that dwell therin?
' The catell and the byrdes are gone, yet saye they: tush, God will not destroye vs vtterly.

Seinge thou art weery in runnynge with the fote men, how wilt thou then runne with horses? In a peaceable sure londe thou mayest be safe, but how wilt thou do in the furious pryde of Iordane? For thy brethren $\bar{a} d$ thy kynred haue altogether despised the, and cried out vpon the in thine absence.
23 d Beleue them not, though they speake fayre wordes to the. As for me (saye I) I haue forsaken myne owne dwellinge place, and left myne heretage. My life also that I loue so wel, have I geuen in to the hodes of myne enemies. Myne heretage is become vnto me, as a Lyon in the wod. It cried out vpon me, therfore haue I forsaken it. ${ }^{e}$ Myne heretage is vnto me, as a spreckled byrde, a byrde of dyuerse coloures is vpon it. Go hence, and gather all the beastes of the felde together, that they maye eate it vp.
${ }^{f}$ Dyuerse hyrdmè haue broken downe my vynyarde, and troden vpon my porcion. Of my pleasaunt porcion, they haue made a wildernes a deserte. They haue layed it waist: and now that it is waist, it sigheth vnto me. Yee the whole londe lieth waist, and no man

[^622]|regardeth it. The distroyers come ouer the heeth euery waye, for ${ }^{5}$ the swearde off the LORDE shal consume from the one ende of $\hat{y}$ löde to the other, and no flesh shal haue rest. They shal sowe wheat, and reepe thornes. They shal take heretage in possession, but it shal do them no good. And ye shalbe confounded of youre owne wynnynges, because of the greate wrath of the LORDE.

Thus saieth the LORDE vpon all myne enel neghbours, that laye honde on myne heretage, which I haue geuen my people of Israel: Beholde, I wil plucke them (namely Israel) out of their londe, and put out the house of Luda from amonge them. "And whe I haue rooted the out, I wilbe at one with the agayne, and wil haue mercy vpon them : and brynge them agayne, euery man to his owne heretage, and in to his lōde. And yf they (namely that trouble my people) wil lerne $\dot{y}$ wayes of them, to sweare by my name: The LORDE lyueth (like as they lerned my people to sweare by Baal) the shal they be rekened amoge my people. 'But yf they wil not obeye, the will I rote out the same folke, and destroye them, saieth the LORDE.

Cobe riij. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus saied the LORDE vnto me: go thy waye a get the a lymen breche, and gyrde it aboute thy loynes, and let it not be wet. Then I got me a brech, acordinge to the commaundemēt of the LORDE, and put it aboute my loynes. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me agayne: Take the breche that thou hast prepared a put aboute the, and get the vp, and go vato Euphrates, and hyde it in a hole off the rock. So wèt I, and hydde it, as the LORDE commaunded me. And it happened longe after this, that the LORDE spake vnto me: Yp, and get the to Euphrates, and fet the breche from thence, which I commaunded the to hyde there. 'Then went I to Euphrates, and digged vp , and toke the brech from the place where I had hyd it: and beholde, the brech was corrupte, so that it was profitable for nothinge.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thus saieth the LORDE: Euen so will I corruppe the pryde off Iuda, and the hie mynde off [^623]they will not heare my worde, they folowe $\dot{y}$ wicked ynaginacions off their owne hert, a hange rpon strauge goddes, the haue they serued a worshipped : and therfore they shalbe as this brech, that serueth for nothinge. For as strately as a brech lieth ypon a mas loynes, so strately dyd I bynde y whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Iuda vnto me, saieth the LORDE: ${ }^{b}$ that they might be my people: that they might have a glorious name: ${ }^{\ddagger}$ they might be in honoure: but they wolde not obeye me. Therfore laye this ryddle before them, and saye: Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel: cuery pot shal be fylled with wyne. And they shal saye: thinkest thou we knowe not, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ euery pot shalbe fylled with wyne? Then shalt thou saye vnto them :

I wil not pardon them, I wil not spare them, ner haue pitie vpon them : but destroye them. Be obedient, geue eare, take no diszdayne at it, for it is the LORDE himself that speaketh. Honoure $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE youre God herein, or he take his light from you, and or euer youre fete stomble in darknesse at $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ hill: lest whe ye loke for the light, he turne it in to $\hat{y}$ shadowe and darknesse of death. For the LORDES flocke shal be caried awaye captiue. Tell the kinge a the rulers: Humble youre selues, set you downe lowe, for $\dot{y}$ crowne of youre glory shal fall from youre heade. The cities towarde the south shalbe shut rp, t no man shal open thè. All Iuda shal be caried awaye captyue, so that none shall remayne.

Lift ip youre eyes, and beholde thē, that come from the North: Like a fat flocke shal they fall tpon the. To whom wilt thou make thy mone, when they come vpon the? for thou hatt taught the thy self, and made the masters [^624]on a woman trauelinge with childe? And yf thou woldest saye the in thine hert: Wherfore come these thinges spō me? Eue for the multitude of thy blasphemies, ${ }^{\text {es }}$ shall thy hynder partes of thy fete be discouered. For like as the man of Inde maye chaunge his skynne, I the cat of the mountayne hir spottes: so maye ye that be exercised in euell, do good. Therfore will I scatre you, lyke as $\dot{y}$ stobble that is take awaye with $\dot{y}$ south wynde. This shal be youre porcion, and the porcion of youre measure, wher with ye shal be rewarded of me, saieth the LORDE: because ye haue forgotten me, and put youre trust in disceatful thinges. Therfore shall I turne thy clothes ouer thy heade, and discouer thy thees, that thy preuyties maye be sene: thy aduoutrie, thy deedly malice, thy beastlynes and thy shamefull whordome. For rpon the feldes and hilles I haue sene thy abhominacions. Wo be rnto the (o Ierusalē) whe wilt thou euer be clensed enymore?

MOROUER, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: 'Thou shalt take ${ }^{\text {y }}$ no wife, ner beget children in this place. For of the children that are borne in this place, of their mothers that haue borne them, and of their 'fathers that have begotten them in this londe, thus saieth the LORDE: They shal dye an horrible deeth, no mā shal mourne for them, ner burie them, but they shal lye as doge vpon the earth. For I wil bringe the agayne in to the lode, that I gaue vnto their fathers.

Beholde, (saieth the LORDE) I will sende out many fiszhers ${ }^{c}$ to take them, and after ${ }^{\dot{t}}$ wil 1 sende out many hunters to hunte thē out, from all mountaynes and hilles ād out of the caues of stones. For myne eyes beholde all their wayes, and they can not be hyd fro my face, nether can their wicked dedes be kepte close out of my sight. But first will I sufficiently rewarde their shamefull blasphemies and synnes, wherwith they haue defyled my londe: Namely, with their stinckinge Idols and abhominacions, wherwith they haue fylled myne heretage. ${ }^{\text {d }}$ O LORDE, my strength, my power, and refuge in tyme off trouble. The Gentiles shall come vnto the from the endes off the worlde, and saye: Verely oure fathers haue cleued vnto lies, their Idols are but vayne and vnprofitable. How can a man make those his goddes, which are not able to be goddes? And therfore, I will once teach them (saieth y LORDE) I wil shewe them my honde and my power, that they maye knowe, $\mathrm{y}^{t}$ my name is $\hat{y}$ LORDE.

a YOURE synne (o ye off the trybe of Iuda) is writte in the table of youre hertes, a graue so vpon the edges of youre aulters with a peme of yron a with an Adamāt clawe: $\dot{y}$ youre children also maye thynke vpon youre aulters, woddes, thicke trees, hie hilles, mountaynes a feldes. Thus saieth the LORDE: ${ }^{f}$ Cursed be the man that putteth his trust in man, ad that taketh flesh for his arme: and he, whose herte departeth from $\hat{y}$ LORDE. He shall be like the heeth, that groweth in the wildernes. This is another communicacion, that God had with Ieremy, sayenge :

$A^{1}$RISE, and go downe in to the Potters $:$ house, and there shall I tell the more off my mynde. Now when I came to the Potters house, I founde him makinge his worke rpon a whele. The vessel that the Potter made off claye, brake amonge his hödes: So he beganne a new, and made another vessell, acordinge to his mynde. Then sayde the LORDE thus vnto me: ${ }^{f}$ Maye not I do with you, as this Potter doth, O ye house off Israel? saieth the LORDE? Beholde, ye house off Israel : ye are in my honde, euen as the claye in the Potters honde.
${ }^{2}$ When $I$ take in honde to rote out, to destroye, or to waist awaye eny people or kigdome: yff that people (agaynst whom I have thus deuysed) cōnerte from their wickednes: Immediatly, I repente off the plage, that I deuysed to bringe vpon thē. ${ }^{h}$ Agayne: Whē I take in honde, to buylde, or to plante a people or a kingdome: yff the same people do euell before me, and heare not my voyce: Immediatly, I repente of the good, that I deuysed to do for them.

Speake now therfore vnto whole Iuda, and to them that dwell at lerusalem: Thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I am deuysinge a plage for you, and am takinge a thinge in honde agayinst you.
:Therfore, let euery man turne from his euell waye, ${ }^{k}$ take vpon you the thinge that is good, and do right. But they saye: ${ }^{i}$ No more of this, we will folowe oure owne ymaginacions, and do enery má acordinge to the wilfulnesse of his owne mynde.

Che mix. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy, what tyme as kinge Sedechias sent vnto him Pashur the sonne off Melchia, and Sophonias the some of Maasia, prest, sayenge: Axe councell at the LORDE (we praye the) of oure behalfe, for Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon besegeth vs, yff the LORDE (peraduenture) will deale with vs, acordinge to his maruelous power, and take him from vs.
$f$ Psal. 30. b. ${ }^{6}$ Iere. 11. d. ${ }^{\wedge}$ Iob 3. a. Iere. 15. b. ' Gen. 19. c. ${ }^{\text {t }}$ Iob 10.c.

Then spake Ieremy: Geue Sedechias this answere, "Thus saieth the LORDE God off Israel: beholde, I will turne backe the weapens, that ye have in youre hondes, wherwith ye fight agaynst the kinge of Babilo et the Caldees, which besege you rounde aboute $\mathfrak{y}$ walles: a I wil brige the together in to the myddest of this cite, and I my selff will fight agaynst you, with an outstretched honde, ād with a mightie arme, in greate displeasure and terrible wrath: and will smyte them, that dwell in this cite: yee both méad catell shal dye of the pestilence.

And after this (saieth the LORDE) I shall delyuer Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, a his seruauntes, his people (and soch as are escaped in the cite, from the pestilence, swearde, and honger) ${ }^{b}$ in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon: yee in to the hodes of their enemies, in to the hordes of those $\frac{t}{y}$ folowe vpon their lyues, which shall smyte them with $\dot{y}$ swerde: they shal not pite the, they shal not spare them, they shall baue no mercy vpon them.

And vito this people thou shalt saye: ${ }^{c}$ Thus saieth the LORDE: beholde, I laye before you the waye of life and deeth. Who so abydeth in this cite, shal perish : ether with the swearde, with honger, or with pestilëce. But who so goeth out to holde on $\stackrel{\stackrel{y}{y}}{\mathrm{~B}}$ Caldees parte, $\dot{f}$ besege it, he shal saue his life, and shall wynne his soule for a pray. For I have set my face agaynst this cite ${ }^{d}$ (saieth the LORDE) to plage it, and to do it no good. It must be geue in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, a be brent with fyre.

And mnto the house of the kinge off Iuda, saye thus: Heare the worde of $\dot{y}$ LORDE (o thou house off Dauid) for thus saieth the LORDE: ${ }^{\circ}$ Ministre rightuousnes, and that soone, delyuer the oppressed frō violent power: or euer my terrible wrath break out like a fyre, and burne so, that no man maye quēch it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginacions. Beholde (saieth the LORDE) ${ }^{f}$ I wil come vpo you, that dwel in the valleis, ${ }^{2}$ rockes and feldes and saye: Tush, who will make vs afrayed? or who will come in to oure houses? For I will wyset you (saieth the LORDE) because off the wickednes off youre invencions, and will kyndle soch a fyre in youre wod, as shall cosume all, that is aboute you.

[^636]The mij. Clapter.

THUS sayde the LORDE also: Go $\boldsymbol{A}$ downe in to the house of the kinge off Iuda, and speake there these wordes, © saye: Heare the worde off the LORDE, thou kinge off Iuda that syttest in the kyngly seate off Dauid: thou and thy seruauntes and thy people, that go in ct out at this gate. ${ }^{4}$ Thus the LORDE commaundeth : kepe equite and rightuousnesse, delyuer the oppressed fro the power off the violent: do not greue ner oppresse the straunger, the fatherlesse ner the wyddowe, $\bar{a} d$ shed no innocēt bloude in this place.

And yff ye kepe these thinges faithfully, then shall there come in at the dore off this house kynges, to syt vpō Dauids seate: they shal be caried in Charettes and ryde vpon horses, both they a their seruauntes, ad their people. 'But yf ye wil not be obedient vnto these commaundementes, I sweare by myne owne self (saieth $\circ \mathrm{y}$ LORDE) this house shal be waist. For thus hath the LORDE spoken ypon the kinges house of Iuda: Thou art the heade, as Galaad is in Libanus: What wilt thou laye of it, yf 1 make the not so waist ( $($ thy cities also) that no man shal dwell there in? I will prepare a destroyer with his weapēs for the, to hew downe thy special Cedre trees, and to cast them in the fyre.

And all the people that go by this cite, shall speake one to another: Wherfore hath the LORDE done thus vito this noble cite? Then shall it be answered: because they haue broken the couenaunt off the LORDE their God, ${ }^{1}$ and haue worshipped and serued straūge goddes. Mourne not ouer the deed, and be not wo for them, but be sory for him that departeth awaye: for he commeth not agayne, ad seeth his natyue countre no more. For thus saieth the LORDE, 'as touchinge Sellum the sonne of losias kinge of Iuda, which reygned after his father, and is caried out off this place :

He shal neuer come hither agayne, for he shal dye in the place, where vinto he is led captyue, and shall se this londe nomore. ${ }^{m}$ Wo worth him, that buyldeth his house with vnrightuousnes, ad his perlers with the good,

[^637]that he hath gotten by violence: which neuer recompenseth his neghburs laboure, ner payeth him his hyre. He thinketh in himself: 1 wil
C buylde me a wyde house, ad gorgeous perlers: He causeth wyndowes to be hewen there in, and the sylinges and geastes maketh he off Cedre, and paynteth them with Zenober. Thinkest thou to reigne, now that thou pronokest me to wrath with thy Cedre trees?

Dyd not thy father eate and drynke, and prospere well, as loge as he dealt with equite ad rightuousnesse? Yee when he helped $\dot{y}$ oppressed and poore to their right, then prospered he well.

From whence came this, but only because he had me before his eyes? saieth the LORDE. Neuertheles, as for thine eyes and thine herte, they loke vpon covetousnesse, to shed innocent bloude, to do wronge and violence. And therfore, thus saieth the LORDE agaynst loaehim, $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda: ${ }^{a}$ They shall not mourne for him (as they vse to do) alas brother, alas syster: Nether shall they saye vnto him: Alas syr, alas for that noble prynce. But as an Asse shall he be buried, corrupte and be cast without the gates of Ierusalem.
Clymme vp the hill off Libanus (o thou doughter Sion) lift vp thy voyce vpon Basan, crie from all partes: for all thy louers are destroyed. I gaue the warninge, whyle thou wast yet i prosperite, But thou saydest: I wil not heare. And this maner hast thou vsed from thy youth, that thou woldest neuer heare my voyce. All thy hyrdmen shalbe dryuen with the wynde, and thy derlinges shalbe caried awaye in to captiuyte: Then shalt thou be brought to shame and confucion, because of all thy wickednes: ${ }^{b}$ thou that dwellest vpon Libanus, ad makest thy nest in the Cedre trees. O how greate shal thy mournynge be, when thy sorowes come rpon the, as a woman trauelinge with childe?

As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE.) 'Though lechonias the sonne off Ioachim kinge off Iuda were the signet off my right honde, yet will I plucke him of: And I wil geue the in to ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ power off the that seke to slaye the, and in to the power off them that thou fearest : in to the power off NabuchodoE nosor the kinge off Babilon, and in to the

But as for the londe that ye will desyre to returne vnto, ye shall neuer come at it agayue. This mā lechonias shal be like an ymage robbed and torne in peces, which pleaseth no man, for all his apparell. Wherfore both he and his sede shalbe sent awaye, and cast out in to a lode, that they knowe not.

O thou earth, earth, earth : heare the worde off the LORDE: Wryte this man amonge the outlawes, for no prosperite shall this man haue all his life longe. Nether shall eny of his sede be so happie, as to syt vpon the seate of Dauid, and to beare rule in Iuda.

WO be vnto the shepherdes, ${ }^{d}$ that destroye, and scatre my flocke, saieth the LORDE. Wherfore, this is the comaundemet of the LORDE God of Israel, vnto the shepherdes that fede my people: Ye scatre ad thrust out my flocke, and loke not ypon them. Therfore, now will I vyset the wickednes of youre ymaginacions, saieth $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE: And will gather together the remnaunt of my flocke, from all londes that I had dryuen them vnto, and will bringe them agayne to their pastures, that they maye growe and increace. I will set shepherdes also ouer them, which shall fede them. They shall no more feare and drede, for there shall none off them be lost, saieth the LORDE. ${ }^{6}$ Beholde, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that 1 wil rayse vp the rightuous braunch off Dauid, which shall beare rule, 'and discusse matters with wyszdome, and shall set vp equyte and rightuousnes agayne in the earth.
${ }^{g}$ In his tyme shall Iuda be saued, and Israel shal dwell without feare. And this is the name that they shall call him: euen the LOR DE oure rightuous maker. ${ }^{h}$ And therfore beholde, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that it shall no more be sayde: the LORDE lyueth, which brought the children off Israel out of the londe of Egipte: But the LORDE lyueth, which brought forth, àd led the sede of the house off Israel, out off

My herte breaketh in my body because of the false prophetes, all my bones shake: I am become like a droncken man (that by the reason of wyne can take no rest) for very feare of the LORDE, and of his holy wordes: Because the londe is full of aduoterers, where thorow it is destroyed and mourneth, ${ }^{a}$ and $\dot{y}$ pleasaunt pastures of the deserte are dryed vp. Yee the waye that men take, is wicked, a their gouernaunce is nothinge like the holy worde of the LORDE. For the prophetes and the prestes them selues are poluted Ypocrytes, ād their wickednes haue I founde in my house, saieth the LORDE. Wherfore, their waye shall be slippery in the darcknesse, wherein they maye stacker and fall. For I will bringe a plage vpon them, euen the yeare of their visitacion, saieth the LORDE. I haue sene foly amonge the prophetes of Samaria, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they preched for Baal, àd disceaued my people off Israel. I haue sene also amonge the Prophetes off Ierusalem foule aduoutery, and presumptuous lies. They take the most shamefull men by the hōde, flatringe them, so that they cā not returne from their wickednes. All these with their citesyns are vnto me, as Sodom, and as the inhabitours off Gomorre.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes concernynge the prophetes: ${ }^{b}$ Beholde, 1 wil fede them with wormwod, a make them dryncke the water of gall. For fro the prophetes of Ierusalem is the sicknes of Ypocrisie come in to all the londe.

Ye shal scke me, a fynde me: Yee, yf so be that ye seke me with youre whole herte, 1 will be founde of you (saieth the LORDE) and will delyuer you out of preson, at gather you together agayne out of all places, where in I haue seatred you, saieth the LORDE: and wil bringe you agayne to the same place, from whence I caused you be caried awaye captyue.

But where as ye saye, that God hath raysed you vp prophetes at Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE spoken (concernynge the kinge that sytteth in the stole of Dauid, and all $\stackrel{\stackrel{\circ}{y}}{ }$ people that dwell in this cite, ${ }^{5}$ youre brethren that are not gone with you in to captiuyte.) Thus (I saye) speaketh the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, 1 wil sende a swearde, honger a pestilence vpon them, ${ }^{h}$ and wil make them like vntymely fyges, that maye not be eate for bytternes. And 1 wil persecute them with the swearde, with honger death.

1 will delyuer them vp to be vexed of all kingdomes, to be cursed, abhorred, laughed to scorne, $\pi$ put to confucion of all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred them: © that because they haue not bene obedient vnto my commaundementes, (saieth the LORDE)

[^646]which I sent vnto them by my seruauntes the prophetes. 'I stode vp early, and sent vnto them, but they wolde not heare, saieth the LORDE. Heare therfore the worde of the LORDE, all ye presoners, whom 1 sent from Ierusale vnto Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, of Achab y sonne of Colaias, t of Sedechias the sonne of Maasia, which prophecie lies vnto you in my name: Beholde, I wil delyuer them in to the honde of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, that he maye slaye them before youre eyes. And all 户f presoners of luda that are in Babilon, shal take vpo them this terme of cursinge, and saye: Now God do vnto the, as he dyd vnto Sedechias $\pi$ Achab, whom the kinge of Babilon rosted in the fyre, because they synned shamefully in Israel.

For they haue not onely defiled their neghbours wyues, but also preached lyenge wordes in my name, which I haue not commaunded them. This 1 testifie, a assure, saieth the LORDE. But as for Semeia the Nehelamite, thou shalt speake vnto him: Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Because thou hast sealed lettres vnder thy name, vnto all the people that is at lerusalem, at to Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest, yee and sent them to all the prestes: where in thou wrytest thus vnto him: The LORDE hath ordened the to be prest in steade of loiada the prest, that thou ${ }^{*}$ shuldest be the chefe in the house of the LORDE aboue all prophetes, $\pi$ preachers, $\pi$ that thou mightest put them in preson, or in $\dot{y}$ stockes. How happeneth it then, that thou hast not reproued leremy of Anathot, which neuer leaueth of his prophecienge. And beside all this, he hath sent vs worde vnto Babilon, and tolde vs planely, that oure eaptiuyte shal longe endure: that we shulde buylde vs houses to dwell therin, a to plante vs gardens, that we might enioye the frutes therof. Which lettre Sophonias the prest dyd rede, and let Ieremy the prophet heare it.

Then eame the worde of the LORDE vnto leremy, sayenge: Sende worde to all them that be in captiuyte, on this maner: 'Thus hath the LORDE spoken concernynge [^647]! Semeia f Nehelamite: Beeause that Semeia hath propheeied vito you without my commyssion, a brought you in to a false hope, therfore thus the LORDE doth certifie you: Beholde, I wil ryset Semeia the Nehelamite, a his sede: so that none of his shall remayne amonge this people, $x$ none of them shall se the good, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ I will do for this people, saieth the LORDE. For he hath preached falsely of the LORDE.

${ }^{8}$ THESE are the wordes, that the LORDE shewed vnto Ieremy, saienge: Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel: "Wryte vp diligently all the wordes, that I haue spoken vnto the, in a boke. For lo, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that I will bringe agayne the presoners of my people of Israel and Iuda, saicth the LORDE: For I will restore them vito the londe, that I gaue to their fathers, and they shall haue it in possession.

Agayne, these wordes spake the LORDE, cocernynge Israel and Iuda: Thus saieth the LORDE: We heare a terrible crie, feare and disquietnesse. For what els doth this signifie, that I se? Namely, that all stronge men smyte, euery man his honde vpon his loynes, as a woman in the payne of hir trauayle. Who euer sawe a man trauayle with childe? Enquere therafter, a se. Yee all their faces are maruelous pale.

Alas for this daye, which is so dredefull, that none maye be lickened vuto it: and alas for the tyme of lacobs trouble, from the which he shall yet be delyuered. For in that daye, saieth the LORDE, I will take his yock from of thy neek, © breake thy bondes. 'They shall nomore serue straunge goddes vnder him, but they shall do seruyce mnto God their LORDE, and to Dauid their kinge, ${ }^{\text {c }}$, whom I will rayse yp vnto them. And as for the, o my seruaunt lacob, feare not (saieth 8 LORDE) and be not afrayed, o Israel. For lo, ${ }^{d}$ I will helpe the also from farre, at thy sede from the londe of their eaptiuyte.

And lacob shall turne agayne, he shalbe in rest, and have a prosperous life, and no man shall make him afrayed. For I am with the, to helpe the, saieth the LORDE. And [^648]though I shal destroye all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred the, yet will I not destroye the, but correeke the, and that with discrecion. ${ }^{\text {e }}$ For I knowe, that thou art in no wise without faute. Therfore thus saieth $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE: I am sory for thy hurte and woundes. There is no man to medle with thy eause, or to bynde vp thy woundes: there maye no man helpe the.

All thy loners haue forgotten the, and care nothinge for the. For I haue geuen the a eruell stroke, and ehastened the roughly: and that for the multitude of thy myszdedes, ${ }^{f}$ for thy synnes haue had the ouer hande. Why makest thou mone for thy harme? I my self haue pite of thy sorowe, but for the multitude of thy myszdedes and synnes, I haue done this vito the.
${ }^{6}$ And therfore all they that deuoure the, shatbe deuoured, and all thine enemies shal be led in to eaptiuyte. All they that make the waist, shalbe waisted them selues: and all those that robbe the, will I make also to be robbed. For 1 will geue the thy health agayne, and make thy woundes whole, saieth the LORDE: because they reuyled the, as one east awaye and despised, o Sion.
${ }^{\text {n }}$ For thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I will set vp lacobs tentes agayne, and defende his dwellinge place. The eite shalbe buylded in hir olde estate, and the houses shal have their right foundacion. And out of them shall go thankesgeuynge, and the voyce of ioye.

I will multiplie them, and they shall not mynishe: I shall endue them with honoure, and no man shall subdue them. Their ehildren shalbe as afore tyme, and their congregacion shal eōtinue in my sight. And all those that vexe them, will I viset.

A captayne also shall come of them, ${ }^{i}$ and a prynce shall springe out from the myddest of them: him will I chalenge to myself, and he shall come vito me. ${ }^{4}$ For what is he, that geueth ouer his herte, to come vnto me? saieth the LORDE. 'Ye shalbe my people also, and I wilbe youre God. THUS saieth the LORDE: The people of 1srael which escaped in $\dot{y}$ wildernes from the swearde, ${ }^{b}$ founde grace to come in to their rest. Euen so shal the LORDE now also apeare vnto me from farre, and saye: I lone the with an euerlastinge loue, therfore do I sprede my mercy before the. ${ }^{c} \mathrm{I}$ will repayre the agayne (o thou doughter of Israel) that thou mayest be fast and sure. Thou shalt take thy tabrettes agayne, a go forth with them, that lede the daunce.

Thou shalt plante vynes agayne vpon $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ hilles of Samaria, and the grape gatherers shall plante, and synge.

And when it is tyme, the watchmen vpon the mount of Ephraim shall crie: "Arise, let vs go vp vnto Sion to oure LORDE God, for thus saieth the LORDE: Reioyce with gladues because of Iacob, crie vnto the heade of the Gentiles: speake out, synge, and saye: The LORDE shall delyuer his people, the remnaunt of Israel, a make them whole. Heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye Gentiles) preach in the Iles, that lie farre of, and saye: he that hath scatred Israel, shall gather him together agayne, and shall kepe him as a shepherde doth his flocke. For the LORDE shall redeme lacob, and ryd him from the honde of the violent. And they shal come, © reioyce vpon the hill of Sion, as [^649]shall haue plenteousnes of goodes, which the LORDE shall geue them: Namely, wheate, wyne, oyle, yonge shepe and calues. And their conscience shalbe as a well watred garden, for they shall nomore be hongrie.

Then shal the mayde reioyce in the daunce, yee both yonge and olde folkes. For I will turne their sorow in to gladnesse, and will comforte them, and make them ioyfull, euen from their hertes. I will poure plenteousnes vpon the hertes of the prestes, and my people shalbe satisfied with good thinges, saieth the LORDE.

Thus saieth the LORDE: ${ }^{5}$ The voyce of heuynes, wepynge and lamentacion came vp in to heauen: euen of Rachel mournynge for hir children, and wolde not be comforted, because they were awaye.

But now saieth the LORDE: leaue of from wepynge and crienge, witholde thyne eyes from teares, for thy laboure shalbe rewarded, saieth the LORDE. And they shall come agayne out of the londe of their enemies: Yee cuen thy posterite shall haue consolacion in this (saieth the LORDE) that thy children shall come agayne in to their owne londe.

Morouer 1 herde Ephraim, (that was led awaye captyue) complayue on this maner: O LORDE, thou hast correcte me, ${ }^{6}$ and thy chastenynge haue I receaued, as an motamed calfe. ${ }^{\text {it }}$ Conuerte thou me, and I shalbe conuerted, for thou art my LORDE God. Yee as soone as thou turnest me, I shall refourme my self: and when I viderstonde, I shall smyte vpon my thee. For verely I haue cōmitted shamefull thinges: $O$ let my youth beare this reprofe and confucion.

Vpon this complaynte, I thought thus by my self: 'is not Ephraim my deare sonne? Is he not the childe, with whom I haue had all myrth and pastyme? For sence the tyme that I first comoned with him, I haue him euer in remembraunce: therfore my very herte dryueth me vnto hin: gladly and louyngly will I haue mercy vpon him, saieth the LORDE. Get the watchmen, prouyde teachers for the: set thine herte vpon the right waie, that thou shuldest walke, and turne agayne: (o thou doughter of 1srael,) turne agayne to these cities of thyne. Yee it shall come therto, ${ }^{\text {c }}$ that like as 1 hane gone aboute in tymes past to rote them out, to scatre them, to breake them downe, to destroye them and chastē them: Euen so will 1 also go diligently aboute, to buylde them up agayne, and to plante them, saieth the LORDE.
${ }^{4}$ Then shall it no more be sayde: $\dot{y}$ fathers haue eaten a sower grape, and the childrens teth are set on edge: for euery one shal dye for his owne myszdede, so that who so eateth a sower grape, his teth shalbe set on edge.
${ }^{~}$ Beholde, the dayes come (saieth the LORDE) ${ }^{\mathrm{f}} \mathrm{I}$ will make a new couenaunt with $\mathfrak{y}$ house of Israel $\underset{y}{ }$ with $\mathfrak{y}$ house of luda: not after the couenaunt that I made with their fathers, when I toke them by the honde, a led them out of the londe of Egipte: which couenaunt they brake, wherfore 1 punyshed

And from thēce forth shall no man teach his neghboure or his brother, and saye : knowe the LORDE: But they shall all knowe me, from the lowest vnto the hyest, saieth the LORDE. For I will forgeue their myszdedes, and wil neuer remembre their synnes

Like as this ordinaunce shal neuer be taken out of my sight, saieth the LORDE: So shal the sede of Israel neuer ceasse, but all waye be a people before me.

Morouer, thus saieth the LORDE: like as the heauen abouc can not be measured, and as the foundacions of the earth beneth maye not be sought out : "So will I also not cast out the whole sede of Israel, for that they haue commytted, saieth the LORDE. ## ©ly mrxij. © Chapter.

THESE wordes spake the LORDE vnto Ieremy, in the tenth yeare of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, which was $\dot{y}$ xviij yeare of Nabuchodonosor, what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste layed sege vnto Ierusalem. But leremy the prophet laye bounde in $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ courte of the preson, which was in the kinge of ludaes house: where Sedechias the kinge of Iuda caused him to be layed, because he had prophecied of this maner: ${ }^{i}$ Thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I will delyuer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon, which shal take it. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, he shal not be able to escape the Caldees, but surely he shall come in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon: which shall speake with him mouth to mouth, and one of them shall loke another in the face. And Sedechias shalbe caried vnto Babilon, [^652]fand there shall he be, vntill the tyme that I vyset him, saieth the LORDE. But yf thou takest in hode to fight agaynst the Caldees, thou shalt not prospere.

And Ieremy sayde: Thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: Beholde, Hananeel the sonne of Sellum thine Vncles sonne shall come unto the, and requyre the to redeme $y$ londe, that lieth in Anathot vnto thy self: ${ }^{a}$ for by reason of kynred it is thy parte to redeme it, and to bye it out.

And so Hananeel myne Vncles sonne came to me in the courte of the preson, (acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, and sayde onto me: Bye my londe (I praye the) that lieth in Anothot in the countre of Ben Iamyn: for by heretage thou hast right to lowse it out for thy self, therfore redeme it. Then I preceaued, that this was the commaundement of the LORDE, and so I lowsed the londe from Hananeel of Anathot, myne Vncles sonne, and weyed him there the moneye: euen seuen sycles, and ten syluer pens.

1 caused him also to make me a writinge, and to seale it, and called recorde there by, and weyed him there the money vpon the waightes. So I toke the euydence with the copie (when it was orderly sealed and red ouer) and I gaue the euydence vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia in the sight of Hananeel my cosen, and in the presence of the witnesses, that be named in the euydence, and before all the Iewes that were therby in the courte of the preson.

I charged Baruch also before them, saienge: The LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel commaundeth the, to take this sealed euydence with the copie, and to laye it in an erthen vessell, that it maye longe continue.

For the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel hath determed, that houses, feldes and vynyardes shalbe possessed agayne in this londe. Now when I had delyuered the euydence vnto Baruch $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Nerias, I besought the LORDE, sayenge: ${ }^{b} \mathrm{O}$ LORDE God, It is thou that hast made heauen and earth with thy greate power and hie arme, and there is nothinge to harde for $\dot{y}$. Thou shewest mercy vpon thousandes, ${ }^{\text {c }}$ thou recompēcest the wickednes of the fathers, in to the bosome of the children that come after them.

[^653]Thou art the greate and mightie God, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes: greate in councell, and infinite in thought: Thine eyes loke vpon all the wayes of mens children, ${ }^{d}$ to rewarde euery one after his waye, and acordinge to the frutes of his inuencions: Thou hast done greate tokens and wonders in the londe of Egipte (as we se this daye) vpon the people of Israel and vpon those men : to make thy name greate, as it is come to passe this daye: ${ }^{e}$ Thou hast brought thy people of Israel out of the Ionde of Egipte, with tokens, with wondres, with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme and with greate terriblenes: and hast geuen them this londe, like as thou haddest promysed vuto their fathers: Namely, that thou woldest geue them a lōde, that floweth with mylke and honye.
$f$ Now when they came therin, and possessed it, they folowed not thy voyce, and walked not in thy lawe: but all that thou commaundedest them to do, that haue they not done, and therfore come all these plages vpon them.

Beholde, there are bulworckes made now agaynst the cite, to take it: and it shalbe wonne of the Caldees that besege it, with swearde, with honger and death, and loke what thou hast spoken, that same shal come vpon them.

For lo, all thinges are present vnto the: Yet sayest thou vnto me (o LORDE God) and commaundest me, that I shall loose a pece of londe snto my self, and take witnesses therto: and yet in the meane season the cite is delyuered in to the power of the Caldees.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, I am the LORDE God of all flesh, Is there eny thinge then to harde for me? Therfore thus sayde the LORDE: beholde, I shal delyuer this cite in to the power of the Caldees, and in to the power of Nabuchodonosor ${ }^{g}$ the kinge of Babilon, they shall take it in: For the Caldees shall come, and wyme this cite, and set fyre vpon it, and burme it: with the gorgeous houses, in whose parlers they haue made sacrifice vnto Baal, and poured drynke offeringes vato straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath.

For seinge the children of Israel and the |children of Inda haue wrought wickednes before me euer from their youth yp, what haue they els done, but pronoked me with the workes of their owne hondes? saieth the LORDE.

Or, what hath this cite benc els, hut a prouokinge of my wrath, euer sence the daye that I buylded it, rnto this houre? Wherin I cast it out of my sight, because of the greate blasphemies of the childré of Israel and Iuda, which they haue done to prouoke me: yee they, their kinges, their prynces, their prestes, their prophetes, whole Iuda, and all the citesyns of Ierusalem.
${ }^{\text {a }}$ When I stode vp early, and taught them and instructe them, they turned their backes to me, and not their faces. They wolde not heare, to be refoumed and correcte. They haue set their goddes in $\dot{y}$ house, ${ }^{b}$ that is halowed vnto my name, to defyle it. They haue buylded hie places for Baal in the valley of the children of Ennon, to vowe their sonnes and doughters vnto Moloch: which I neuer commanded them, nether came it euer in my thought, to make Iuda syme with soch abhominacion.

Morouer thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken, concernynge this cite, which (as ye youre selues confesse) shalbe delyuered in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, when it is wonne with the swerde, with honger and with pestilence. "Beholde, I will gather them together from all londes wherin I haue scatred them in my wrath, in my fearfull and greate displeasure: and will bringe them agayne vito this place, where they shal dwell safely. And they shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God.
${ }^{4}$ And I will geue them one herte and one waye, that they maye feare me all the daies of their life, that they and their children after them maye prospere. ${ }^{\text {E }}$ And I will set vp an enerlastinge couenaunt with them, Namely: that I will neuer ceasse to do them good, and that I will put my feare in their hertes, so that they shall not runne awaye fro me.
${ }^{\prime}$ Yee I will haue a lust and pleasure to do them good, and faithfully to plante them in this londe, with my whole herte, and with all my soule.

For thus saieth the LORDE: like as I hate brought all this greate plage vpon this [^654]people: so will 1 also bringe vpon them all the good, that I haue promysed them. And men shall haue their possessions in this londe, wherof ye saye now, that it shal nether be inhabited of people ner of catell, but be deliuered in to the hodes of the Caldees: Yee londe shalbe bought for money, a euydēces made ther ypon a sealed before witnesses in the countre of Ben Iamin, a rounde aboute Ierusalem: in the cities of Iuda, in the cities that are vpo the mountaynes, $a$ in them that lie beneth, yee $a$ in the cities that are in the desertc. For I wil bringe their presoners hither agayne, saieth the LORDE.

Che mriij. Chapter.

MOROUER the worde of the LORDE ${ }^{5}$ came vnto Ieremy on this maner, whe he was yet bounde in the courte of the preson: Thus saieth the LORDE, which fulfilleth the thinge that he speaketh, the LORDE which perfourmeth the thinge that he taketh in honde: euen he, whose name is the LORDE: Thou hast cried vnto me, and I haue herde the: I haue shewed greate and hie thinges, which were unknowne vnto you.

Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE God of Israel, concernynge the houses of this cite, and the houses of the kinges of Iuda: that they shalbe broken thorow the ordinaunce and weapens, when the Caldees come to besege them: and they shalbe fylled with the deed carcases of men, whom I will slaye in my wrath and displeasure: whē I turne my face from this cite, because of all hir wickednes. Beholde, (saieth the LORDE) I will heale their woundes, and make them whole: I will open them the treasure of peace and treuth.
${ }^{\text {b }}$ And I will returne the captiuyte of Iuda and Israel: and will set them vp agayne, as they were afore. From all myszdedes (wherin they haue offended agaynst me) I will clēse them: And all their blasphemies which they haue done agaynst me, when they regarded me not, I will forgeue them.

And this shal get me a name, a prayse and honoure, amonge all people of the earth, which shall heare all the good, that I will shewe vnto them: Yee they shall be afrayed and astonnied at all the good dedes and benefites, that I will do for them. Morouer, thus saieth the [^655]LORDE: ${ }^{a}$ In this place, wherof ye saye that it shalbe a wildernesse, wherin nether people ner catell shal dwell: In like maner in the cities of Iuda and without Ierusalem (which also shaibe so voyde, that nether people ner catell shall dwell there) Shal the voyce of gladnesse be herde agayne, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde, the voyce of them that shall synge: ( ${ }^{b}$ Prayse the LORDE of hoostes, for he is louynge, and his mercy endureth for euer) and the voyce of them that shall offre vp giftes in the house of the LORDE. For I will restore the captiuyte of this londe, as it was afore, saieth the LORDE. Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes. It shall come yet therto, that in this londe, which is voyde from men and catell, and in all the cities of the londe, there shal be set vp shepherdes cotages: in the cities upon the mountaynes, and in the cities that lie vpon the playne, and in the deserte.

In the londe of Ben Iamin, in the feldes of Ierusalem, and in the cities of Iuda shal the shepe be nombred agayne, vnder the honde of him, that telleth them, saieth the LORDE. Beholde, 'the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that I wil perfourme that good thinge, which I haue promised vuto the house of Israel and to the house of Iuda. In those daies and at the same tyme, I will bringe forth vnto Dauid, the braunch of rightuousnes, and he shall do equite and rightuousuesse in the londe. ${ }^{d}$ In those daies shall Iuda be helped, and Ierusalem shall dwell safe, and he that shall call her is euen God oure rightuous maker. For thus the LORDE promyseth : ${ }^{\text {e }}$ Dauid shal neuer want one, to syt vpon the stole of the house of 1srael : / nether shall the prestes and Leuites want one to offre all waye before me, burntofferinges, to kyndle the meatofferinges, $\tau$ to prepare the sacrifices.
And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy after this maner: Thus saieth the LORDE: ${ }^{5}$ Maye the couenaunt which I haue made with daye and night, be broken, that there shulde not be daye and night in due season? Then maye my couenaunt also be broken, which I made with Dauid my seruaunt, and so he not to haue a sonne to reigne in his Trone. "So shall also the prestes and Leuités neuer fayle, but serue me.' 'For like [^656]as the starres of heauen maye not be nombred, nether the sonde of the see measured: so will I multiplie the sede of Dauid my seruaunt, and of the Leuites my ministers.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came to Ieremy, saienge : Cōsidrest thou not what this people speaketh? Two kyureddes (saye they) had the LORDE chosen, © those same two hath he cast awaye. For so farre is my people come, $\dot{y}$ they haue no hope to come together eny more, and to be one people agayne. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: If I haue made no couenaunt with daye a night, and geuē no statute vnto heauen and earth : then will I also cast awaye the sede of Dauid iny seruaut: so that I wil take no prynce out of his sede, to rule the posterite of Abrahā, Isaac and Iacob. But yet I will turne agayne their captiuyte, and be mercifull vnto them.

THESE are the wordes which the LORDE spake vnto leremy,", what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, $\frac{1}{}$ all his hoostes (out of all the kingdomes $\dot{y}$ were vnder his power) and all his people, fought agaynst Ierusalem and all the cities therof. Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel: Go, a speake to Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, © tell him: ${ }^{2}$ The LORDE sendeth the this worde: Beholde, I will delyuer this cite in to the hode of the kinge of Babilon, he shal burne it, and thou shalt not escape his hondes, but shalt be led awaye presoner, and delyuered into his power. Thou shalt loke the kinge of Babilon in the face, and he shal speake with the mouth to mouth, and then shalt thou go to Babilon. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE, o Sedechias thou kinge of Iuda: Thus saieth the LORDE vito the: Thou shalt not be slayne with the swearde, but shalt die in peace. Like as thy fore fathers, " the kinges, thy progenitours were brente: so shalt thou be brente also, $\pi$ in the mournynge they shal saye: oh lorde. For thus haue I determed, saieth the LORDE.
Then spake Ieremy the prophet all these wordes vuto Sedechias kinge of Iuda in Ierusalem: what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste beseged Ierusalem, and the remauant of the cities: Namely, Lachis 【 Azecha, ${ }^{\text {w which }}$

THE wordes which the LORDE spake vnto leremy, (in the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of losias kinge of luda) are these: ${ }^{j}$ Go vnto ${ }^{\circ}$ house of the Rechabites, a call them out, is bringe the to $\dot{y}^{\circ}$ house of the LORDE in to some commodious place, and geue them wyne to drynke. Then toke I lasanias the sonne of leremy, the sonne of Habazania, and his brethre and all his sonnes, and the whole housholde off the Rechabites: and brought them to the house off the LORDE, in to the closet of the children off Hanan the sonne off Igdalia the man off God: which was by the closet off the prynees, that is aboue the closet of Maasia the sonne of Sellum, which is the chefe off the tresury. And before the sonnes of the kynred of the Rechabites, I set pottes full of wyne, and cuppes, and sayde vnto them: drynke wyne. But they sayde: we drynke no wyne, For lonadab the sonne of Rechab oure father commaunded vs, sayenge: Ye and youre sonnes shall neuer drynke wyne, ${ }^{5}$ buylde no houses, sowe no sede, plante no vynes, yee ye shall have no vynyardes: but for all youre tyme ye shall dwell in tētes, $\stackrel{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ ye maye lyue lōge in the lōde, wherin ye be straügers.

Thus haue we obeyed the comaundemēt of lonadab $\dot{y}$ sonne of Rechab oure father, in all $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ he hath charged vs, and so we drynke no wyne all oure lyue longe: we, oure wyues, oure sonnes t oure doughters. IN the fourth yeare of Ioachim the sonne ${ }^{\boldsymbol{\alpha}}$ of Iosias kynge of luda, came $\dot{y}$ worde of the LORDE vnto leremy, sayēge: Take a boke, © ${ }^{d}$ write therin all $\dot{y}$ wordes, $\dot{y}$ I have spoke to the, to Israel, to Iuda a to all the people, frō the tyme $\dot{y}$ I $I$ begāne for to speake vuto the (in $\dot{y}$ reigne of Iosias) vnto this daye. That when the house of Iuda heareth of the plage, which I haue deuysed for the , they maye peraduēture turne, ${ }^{6}$ euery man frō his wicked waye, that I maye forgeue their offences and symnes.

Then dyd Ieremy call ${ }^{f}$ Baruch the sonne of Nerias, a Baruch wrote in the boke at y mouth of leremy, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had spoken unto him. And Ieremy commaunded Baruch sayenge: I am in preson, so that I maye not come in to the house of y LORDE: therfore go thou thither, a rede the boke, that thou hast writte at my mouth: Namely, the wordes off the LORDE, a rede thē in the LORDES house vpon the fastinge daye : that the people, whole Iuda, $\mathfrak{a}$ all they that come out of the cities, maye heare. Peraduenture they will praye mekely before the face of the LORDE, and turne, euery one from his wicked waye. For greate is the wrath and displeasure, that the LORDE hath taken agaynst this people.

So Baruch the sonne of Nerias dyd, acordinge vuto all that leremy the prophet comañded him, readinge the wordes off the LORDE out off the boke in the LORDES house. And this was done in the fyfth yeare off Ioachim $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, in the ix. moneth ${ }^{8}$ when it was commaunded, that all the people of lerusalem shulde fast before the LORDE, and they also that were come from the cities of Iuda vnto Ierusalem.

Then red Baruch the wordes of leremy out of the boke within the house of the LORDE, out of $\dot{y}$ treasury of ${ }^{h}$ Gamarias the some off Saphan the scrybe, which is besyde the hyer loffte off the new dore of the LORDES house : that all y people might heare. Now whe Micheas the sonne of Gamarias the sonne of Saphan had herde all the wordes of the LORDE out of $y$ boke, he wēte downe to the kinges palace in to $\hat{y}$ scrybes chābre, for [^658]|there all $\dot{y}$ prynces were set: Elisama the scrybe, Dalias the sonne of Semei, Elnatha the sonne off Achbor, Gamaria the sonne of Saphan, Sedechias the somne of Hananias, with all the princes. And Micheas tokle them all the worles, $\dot{y}$ he herde Baruch rede out of the boke before the people.

Then all the prynces sent lehudi $\dot{y}$ sonne of Nathanias the some of Salamia the some of Chusi, voto Baruch, sayenge: Take in thine honde the boke, wherout thou hast red before all the people, and come. So Baruch the sonne of Nerias toke $\mathfrak{y}$ boke in his honde, and came vnto them. And they sayde vito him: Syt downe, and rede the boke, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ we maye heare also. So Baruch red, $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ they might heare. Now when they had herde all the wordes, they were abaszhed one vpon another, and sayde vnto Baruch: We wil certifie the kinge of all these wordes. And they examined Baruch, sayenge: Tell vs, how didest thou wryte all these wordes out off his mouth? Then Baruch answered them: He spake all these wordes vnto me with his mouth, and I alone was with him, and wrote them in the boke.

Then sayde the prynces unto Baruch: Go thy waye, and hyde the with Ieremy, so that no man knowe where ye be. And they went in to the kinge to the courte. But they kepte the boke in the chambre off Elisama the scrybe, ad tolde the kynge all the wordes, that he might heare. So the kynge sent Iehudi to fetch him y boke, which he brought out of Elisama $\mathfrak{y}$ scrybes chambre. And Iehudi red it, that the kynge and all the prynces, which were aboute him, might heare. Now the kynge sat in the wynter house, for it was in the ix. Moneth, and there was a good fyre before him. And whē Iehudi had red thre or foure leaues therof, ${ }^{a}$ he cut the boke in peces with a penne knyfe, and cast it in to the fyre vpo the herth, vntil the boke was all brente in the fyre vpon the herth.

Yet no man was abashed therof, or rente his clothes: nether the kynge himselffe, ner his seruauntes, though they herde all these wordes. Neuertheles Elnathan, Dalias ād Gamarias, besoughte the kinge, that he wolde not burne the boke: notwithstondinge $y$ kynge wolde not heare them, but commaunded Ieramyhel the sonne off Amalech, Sarias the [^659]sonne of Esriel and Selamia $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Abdiel, to laye hondes spon Baruch the scrybe, and spon Ieremy the prophet: but the LORDE kepte them out of sight. After now that the kynge had brente the boke, id $\dot{y}$ sermōs which Baruch wrote at $\hat{y}$ mouth off Ieremy: The worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy sayenge: Take another boke, and write in it all the forsayde sermons, that were written in the first boke, which Ioachim the kynge off Iuda hath brente.

And tell Ioachim the kynge off Iuda, Thus saieth the LORDE: thou hast brente $\mathrm{g}^{\circ}$ boke, and thoughtest within thy selff: Why hast thou written therin, that the kynge off Babilon shal come, đ make this lode waist? so that he shall make both people and catel to be out of it? 'Therfore thus the LORDE saieth, of Ioachim the kynge of Iuda: There shal none of his generacion syt vpon the trone of Dauid. His deed corse shalbe cast out, ${ }^{\text {c }}$ that the heat off the daye, and the frost of the night maye come vpon him: And I will vyset the wickednes of him, of his sede, and of his seruauntes. Morouer all the euell that I haue promised the (though they herde me not) will I bringe vpon them, vpon $\frac{8}{y}$ inhabitours of Ierusalem, and vpon all Iuda. Then toke Ieremy another boke, and gaue it Baruch the scrybe the sonne of Nerias, which wrote therin out of the mouth off Ieremy : all the sermons that were in the first boke, which Ioachim the kynge off Iuda dyd burne. And there were added unto them many mo sermons, then before.

SEDECHIAS $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Iosias ( ${ }^{d}$ which was made kynge thorow Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon) reigned in the londe of Iuda, in the steade off Iechonias the some of Ioachim. But nether he, ner his seruauntes, ner the people in the lode wolde obeye the wordes of $\dot{y}$ LORDE, which he spake by the prophet Ieremy. ${ }^{\text {E }}$ Neuertheles Sedechias the kynge sent Iuchal the sonne of Selamia and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest to the prophet Ieremy, sayenge: O praye thou vnto the LORDE oure God for vs. Now Ieremy walked fre amonge the people at that tyme, and was not put in preson as yet. ${ }^{\text {s }}$ Pharaos hooste also was come out of Egipte: which $\mathbf{3}$ vnto me for councell: ${ }^{a}$ Beholde, Pharaos hooste which is come forth to helpe you, shall returne to Egipte in to his owne londe: But the Caldees shall come agayne, © fight agaynst this cite, wynne it, and set fyre vpon it. For thus saieth the LORDE: disceaue not youre owne myndes, thinkynge on this maner: Tush, the Caldees go now their waye from vs : No, they shall not go their waye. For though ye had slayne the whole hooste off the Caldees that besege you, and euery one of the slayne laye in his tent, yet shulde they stonde vp, and set fyre vpon this cite. Now whe the hooste of the Caldees was broke vp from Ierusale for feare of the Egipcians armye, Ieremy went out of Ierusale towarde the löde of Ben Iamin, to do certayne busynesse there amoge y people. And whe he came vnder Ben lamyns Porte, there was a porter called lerias the sonne of Selamia ${ }^{b} \stackrel{\stackrel{8}{y} \text { zōne of Hananias, }}{ }$ which fell vpō him t toke him, sayēge: thy mynde is to runne to the Caldees. Then sayde Ieremy: It is not so, I go not to the Caldees. Neuertheles Ierias wolde not beleue him, but brought Ieremy boūde before the princes. Wherfore the princes were angrie with Ieremy, causinge him to be beaten, a to be layed in preson in the house of Ionathas the scrybe. For he was the ruler of the preson. Thus was Ieremy put in to the dongeon $\tau$ preson, and so laye there a longe tyme. "Then Sedechias the kynge sent for him, a called him, a axed him quietly in his owne house, sayenge : thinkest thou this busynes (that now is in honde) cometh of the LORDE? Ieremy answerde: yee $\dot{f}$ it doth: a thou (sayde he) shalt be delyuered in to the kynge of Babilons power.

7. Morouer, Ieremy sayde vnto kynge Sedechias: What have I offended agaynst $\hat{y}$, agaynst thy seruauntes, or agaynst this people, that ye haue caused me be put in preson? ${ }^{d}$ Where are youre prophetes, which haue prophecied vnto you and sayde, that y kynge of Babilơ shulde not come agaynst you d this lōde? And therfore heare now, o my lorde

SAPHATIAS the sonne off Mathā, Gedolias the sonne of Pashur, Iuchal the sonne of Selamia, a Pashur the sonne of Malchias perceaued the wordes, $\dot{\ddagger}$ Ieremy had spoke vnto all the people, namely on this maner: Thus saieth the LORDE: Who so remayneth in this cite, shall perish, ether with the swearde, ${ }^{e}$ with honger or with pestilence: But who so falleth vito the Caldees, shal escape, wynnynge his soule for a pray, t shal lyue. For thus saieth the LORDE: This cite (no doute) ${ }^{f}$ must be delyuered in to $\dot{y}$ power of the kige of Babilo, a he also shal wyme it. The sayde the prynces vnto $\dot{y}$ kynge: Syr, we besech you let this man be put to death, For thus he discorageth the hodes of the soudyers $\dot{y}$ be in this cite, $\tau$ the hōdes of all the people, whē he speaketh soch wordes vnto thē. This mā verely laboureth not for peace of y people, but mischefe. Sedechias the kinge answered and sayde: lo, he is in youre hōdes, for y kige maye denye you nothinge. Then toke they Ieremy, and cast him in to the dongeon off Malchias the sonne off Amalech, that dwelt in the fore entre off the preson. And they let downe Ieremy with coardes in to a dongeon, where there was no water, but myre. So Ieremy stack fast in the myre. Now when Abdemelech the Morian beynge a chamberlayne in the kynges courte, vnderstode, that they had cast leremy in to the dongeon: he went out off the kynges house, and spake to the kynge (which the sat vnder the porte off Ben Iamin) these wordes: My lorde the kynge, where as these men medle with Ieremy the prophet, they do him wronge: Namely, in that they haue put him in preson, there to dye of honger, for there is no more bred in the cite. The the kynge commaunded Abdemelech the Morian, and sayde: Take from héce xax. men whom thou wilt, at drawe

And Abdemelech the Morian sayde vnto the prophet Ieremy: O put these ragges and clontes vuder thine arme holes, betwixte the and the coardes : ad leremy dyd so. So they drewe vp leremy with coardes and toke him out of the dongeon, and he remayned in the fore entrie of the preson. The Sedechias the kynge sent and caused leremy the prophet be called unto him, in to the thirde entrie, that was by the house off the LORDE. ${ }^{a}$ And the kyinge sayde vito Ieremy: I wil axe the somwhat, but hyde nothinge fro me. Thē leremy answerde Sedechias: If I be playne vnto the, thou wilt cause me suffre death : yf 1 geue the coūcell, thou wilt not folowe me. So the kynge swore an ooth secretly vnto leremy, sayenge: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, that made vs these soules, I will not slaye the, ner geue the in to the hōdes of them, that seke after thy life.

Then sayde Ieremy vnto Sedechias: Thus saieth $\dot{y}$ LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Yf case be, that thou wilt go forth vnto the kynge off Babilons prynces, thou shalt saue thy life, ${ }^{b}$ and this cite shall not be brēt, yee both thou and thy housholde shall escape with youre lyues. But yff thou wilt not go forth to the kynge off Babilons prynces, then shal this cite be delyuered in to the hondes of the Caldees which shal set fyre vpon it, and thou shalt not be able to escape them. And Sedechias sayde vnto leremy: 1 am afrayde for the lewes, that are fled vnto the Caldees, lest I come in their hodes, and so they to have me in derision.
But leremy answerde: No, they shal not betraye the: $O$ herken vnto the voyce off the LORDE (I beseke $\hat{y}$ ) which I speake vnto the, so shalt thou be well, and saue thy life. But yf thou wilt not go forth, the LORDE hath tolde me this planely: Beholde, all the women that are left in the kynge of Iudaes house, shal go out to the kynge of Babilons prynces. For they thynke, $\frac{i}{y}$ thou art disceaved: and that $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ men in whom thou didest put thy trust, haue gotten the vnder, and set Therfore all thy wyues with their children shall fle vnto the Caldees, and thou shalt not escape their hondes, but shalt be $\hat{y}$ kynge of Babilons presoner, at this cite shall be brent. Then sayde Sedechias vnto leremy: loke $\dot{y}$ no body knowe off these wordes, and thou shalt not dye. But yf the prynces perceaue, that 1 haue talked with the, and come vinto the, sayenge: $O$ speake, what sayde the kynge to the? hyde it not from vs, and we wil not put the to death. Tell vs (we praye the) what sayde $y$ kynge to the ? Se thou geue them this answere - I haue humbly besought the kynge, that he will let me lye no more in lonathas house, that I dye not there? Then came all the princes vnto Ieremy, and axed him, And he tolde them, after the maner as the kynge bad him. ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Then they helde their peace, for they perceaued nothinge. So leremy abode still in the fore entrie off the preson, untill the daye that lerusalem was wonne.

Che mrix. Chapter.

NOW when the cite off lerusale was ${ }^{2}$ taken ${ }^{d}$ (for in the ix. yeare of Sedechias kynge of Iuda in the tenth Moneth, came Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon and all his hooste, and beseged Ierusalem. And in the xi. yeare of Sedechias in the fourth Moneth $\mathfrak{y} \mathrm{ix}$. daye of ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{g}}$ Moneth, he brake in to the cite). Then all the kynge of Babilons prynces came in, at sat the downe under the porte: Nergall, Sarezer, Samgarnebo, Sarsechim, Rabsaris, Nergal, Sarezer, Rabmag, with all the other prynces of the kynge of Babilon. And when Sedechias the kynge of luda with his soudyers sawe them, they fled, and departed out of $\dot{y}$ cite by night thorow the kynges garde, and thorow the porte that is betwene the two walles, and so they wente towarde the wildernesse.

But the Caldees hooste folowed fast after them, and toke Sedechias in the felde of Iericho, and brought him presoner to Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilō mto Reblatha, that lieth in the londe off Hemath where he gaue iudgment rpon him. So the kynge of Babilon caused the children of Sedechias and all the nobles off luda be slayne, before his face at Reblatha. And made Sedechias [^663]eyes be put out, and boūde him with chaynes, and sent him to Babilon.

Morouer, the Caldees brēt up the kynges palace, ${ }^{a}$ with $\hat{y}$ other houses of the people, and brake downe the walles off Ierusalem. As for the remnaunt of the people that were in the cite, and soch as were come to helpe them (what so euer was left of the come sorte) Nabuzaradan the chefe captayne caried them to Babilon. But Nabuzaradà the chefe captayne let the rascall people (and those that had nothinge) dwell still in the lode off Iuda, and gaue them vynyardes and corne feldes at the same tyme. Nabuchodonosor also the kynge of Babilon gaue Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne a charge, cōcernynge Ieremy, sayenge : take and cherish him, and make moch off him: se thou do him no harme, but intreate him after his owne desyre.

T${ }^{7}$ HIS is the worde ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ was shewed to Ieremy cocerninge all $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ Iewes, which dwelt in Egipte: at Magdal, at Taphnis, at Memphis, $\tau$ in the londe of Patures. Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Ye haue sene all $\dot{y}$ mysery, $\frac{f}{y}$ I haue brought vpon Ierusalem, and vpon all the cities of Iuda: so that this daye they are desolate, and no man dwellinge therin: © $\stackrel{t}{y}$ because of the greate blasphemies, which they committed, to pronoke me vnto anger: In that they wente backe to do sacrifice ad worshipe vnto straunge goddes: whom nether they, ner ye, ner youre fathers haue knowne. How be it, I sent vnto them my seruaūtes all the prophetes: 'I rose vp early, I sent vnto them, and gaue them warninge: O do no soch abhominable thinges, a thinges that I hate. But they wolde not folowe ner herkē, to turne from their wickednes, and to do no more sacrifice vnto straunge goddes.

Wherfore my indignacion a wrath was kyndled, and it brente vp the cities of Iuda, the feldes with the stretes off Ierusalem: so that they were made waist and desolate, as it is come to passe this daye. Now therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: How happeneth it, that ye do so greate euell wnto youre owne soules, thus to destroye the men and women, childré and babes of Iuda? so that none of you is left, because ye prouoke me vnto wrath with the workes of youre owne hondes: whe ye offre wnto straunge godides in the londe off Egipte, where as ye be gone to dwell: That ye might vtterly perishe, and that ye might be reuyled and shamfully intreated of all nacions. Or, have ye now forgotten the wiekednes off youre forefathers, the wickednes off $y$ kynges of Iuda and their wyues, $\dot{y}$ wickednes that ye youre selues ād youre wyues haue done in the londe of Iuda, in the eite and in the londe off Ierusalem?

Yet are ye not sory this daye, ye feare not, nether walke ye in my lawe and in my commaundementes, that I haue gene vito you and youre forefathers.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God off Israel: ${ }^{d}$ I am stedfastly advysed and determed, to punysh you, and to rote out all Iuda. 'As for the remnaunt off Iuda that purposly wente in to Egipte, there to ease them off their mysery: I will take them, and they shall all be destroyed. In $\mathfrak{y}$ londe of Egipte shall they perishe, beynge consumed with the swearde and with honger. For from $\dot{f}$ leest vnto $\underset{y}{\circ}$ most, they shal perishe with the |swearde and with honger. Morouer they shalbe reuyled, abhorred, shamed, and confounded. For I will viset them that dwell in Egipte, ${ }^{a}$ as I haue visited Ierusalem: with the swearde, with honger and with pestilence: So that none off the remnaunt off Iuda, which are gone to dwell in Egipte, shall be left to come agayne in to $y$ londe off Iuda: all though they thynke to come thither agayne, and to dwell there. For none shal come agayne, but soch as are fled awaye.

Then all the men which knewe that their wyues had offred vnto straunge goddes, a a greate sorte off wyues that stode there, yee and all the people that dwelt there in Egipte in the cite of Patures, answerde Ieremy, a sayde: As for the wordes that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, we will in no wyse heare them: but what so euer goeth out of oure owne mouth, that wil we do: We will do sacrifice, and offre oblacions vnto the Quene off heanen: ${ }^{b}$ like as we and oure forefathers, oure kynges and oure heades haue done in the cities off Iuda, and in the stretes and feldes of Ierusalem. For then had we plenteousnesse off vytales, then were we in prosperite, and no myszfortune came vpon vs.

But sens we left of, to offre, and to do sacrifice vnto the Quene of heauen, 'we hane had scarcenes of all thinges, and perish with the swearde and honger. Last of all, when we wome did sacrifice and offred vnto the Quene of heaué, did we make her cakes ād poure vnto her drinkofferinges, to do her seruyce, without oure huszbondes wylles?

Then sayde leremy vinto all the people, to the men, to the women and to all the folke, which had geuen him that auswere: Dyd not the LORDE remembre the sacrifices that ye, youre forefathers, ${ }^{d}$ youre kiges a rulers (with all the people) haue offred in the cities of Iuda, in the stretes and londe off Ierusalem? and hath he not considered this in his mynde? In so moch, that the LORDE might no longer suffre the wickednes off youre inuencions, and the abhominable thynges which ye dyd? ${ }^{e}$ Is not youre londe desolate © voyde, yee and abhorred, so that no mā dwelleth therin eny more, as it is come to passe this daye?
${ }^{\prime}$ Dyd not all this happen vnto you, because

[^666]ye made soch sacrifice, and symsed agaynst the LORDE? Ye haue not folowed his voyce, to walke in his lawe, in his ordinaunces and statutes. ${ }^{g}$

Yee this is the cause, that all mysfortune happened vnto you, as it is come to passe this daye.

Morouer, Ieremy spake vnto all the people and to all the women: Heare the worde off the LORDE all Iuda, ye that be in the londe off Egipte: Thus saieth the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Ye and youre wyues haue spoken with youre owne mouth, the thinge that ye haue fulfilled in dede.

Yee thus haue ye sayde : "We will not fayle, but do the thynge that pleaseth vs: we wil do sacrifice and poure out drynkoffringes to the Quene of heauen. Purposly haue ye set ip youre owne good meanynges, a hastely have ye fulfilled youre owne intente. And therfore, heare the worde of the LORDE all Iuda, ye that dwell in the londe off Egipte.

Beholde, 'I haue sworue by my greate name (saieth the LORDE) that my name shal not be rehearsed thorow eny mans mouth of Iuda, in all the londe of Egipte: to saye: The LORDE God lyueth, for I wil watch, to plage them, and not for their wealth. The crie off their enemies shall make a noyse, as the blast of a trompet. For they shall entre in with their hooste, and come with axes, as it were hewers downe of wod. $\mathfrak{a}$ $T$ HESE are the wordes, that the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy the prophet agaynst the Phylistines, ${ }^{\text {e }}$ before that Pharao smote the cite off Gaza. Thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, there shall waters arise out off the north: and shall growe to a greate floude, runnynge ouer and couerynge the londe, the cities and them that dwell therin.

And the men shall crie, and all they that dwell in the londe, shall mourne at the noyse and stampynge off their stronge barded horses, [^669]at the shakynge off their charettes, and at the romblinge off the wheles. 'The fathers shall not loke to their children, so feable and weery shall their hondes be: at the same tyme, when he shal be there, to destroye the whole londe off the Phylistynes. He shall make waist both Tirus, Sidon ad all other that are sworne vato them.

For the LORDE will destroye all Palestina, and the other Iles, that be deuyded fro the countre. Baldnesse is come vpon Gaza, Ascalon with hir other valleys shall kepe hir peace.

How longe wilt thou slaye, $O$ thou swearde off the LORDE? Turne agayne in to thy sheeth, reste, and leaue off. But how can it ceasse, when the LORDE himselff hath genen it a charge agaynst Ascalon, and raysed it up agaynst the cities off the see coast?

THUS saieth $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE off hoostes $\mathfrak{y}$ God of Israel against Moab: $f$ Wo be to $\frac{8}{\circ}$ cite of Nebo, for it shal be layed waist, brought to confucion and taken. Yee thy strōge cite of Cariatharim shalbe brought to shame, and afrayed: Moab shall nomore be had in honoure: Wicked councell shalbe taken vpon Hesebon. Come (shall they saye) let vs rote them out, that they maye be nomore amonge the nombre of the Gentiles, yee that they maye nomore be thought vpon: Thus the swearde shall persecute $\hat{y}$. $A$ voyce shall crie from Horonaim: With greate waistinge and destruction, is Moab made desolate.

And this crie shalbe herde in all hir cities. At the goinge vp vnto Luhith there shall arise a lamétacion: and downe towarde Horonaim, there shall be herde a cruell and a deedly crie: Get you awaye, saue youre lyues a be like vnto the heeth in $\dot{y}$ wildernes. ${ }^{\text {B }}$ For, because thou hast trusted in thy stronge holdes and treasure, thou shalt be taken. Chamos with his prestes and prynces shall go awaye in to captiuyte.

The destroyer shal come vpon all cities, none shall escape. The valleys shalbe destroyed, and the feldes shall be layed waist: like as the LORDE hath determed.

Make a token vnto Moab, that she get hir awaye spedely: for hir cities shalbe made so desolate, that no man shall dwell therin.

But lo, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that I shall sende hir trussers to trusse her yp, to prepare and season hir vessels: yee hir tankerdes rattell, and shake to t fro. And Moab shalbe ashamed off Chamos, like as Israel was ashamed off Bethel, wherin she put hir trust.

Wherfore do ye thinke thus: we are mightie, and stronge men off warre? Moab shal be destroyed, and hir eities brente yp: ${ }^{\circ}$ hir chosen yonge men shall be slayne, saieth the kinge, whose name is the LORDE off hoostes. The destruction off Moab commeth on a pace, and hir fall is at honde.
All hir neghbours shall mourne for her, and all they that knowe hir name, shal saye: O how happeneth it, that the stronge staff and the goodly rod is thus broken? And thou doughter Dibō, come downe from thy glory, and syt in pouerte. For he that destroyeth Moab, shall come rp to the also, and breake downe thy stronge holdes.

And thou that dwellest in Aroer, get the to $y$ strete, a loke aboute the: axe them that are fled and escaped, and saye: what thynge is happened? O, Moab is confounded and ouercome.

Moume and crie, tell it out at Arnon, that Moab is destroyed. And mysery shall come spon the playne londe: Namely, vpō holon, and Iaza: ypon Mephat and Dibō, ypon Nebo and the house of Diplathaim, ypon Cariatharim and Bethgamul, vpon Bethmaon and Carioth, vpon Bosra and all the cities in the lode off Moab, whether they lye farre or neare.

The horne of Moab shal be smytte downe, t hir arme broken, saieth the LORDE. Make hir dronken (for she magnified hir self aboue the LORDE:) that men maye clappe their houkes at hir vomyte, and that she also maye be laughed to seorne. O Israel, shalt thou not laugh him to seorne, when he is taken amōge theues? ${ }^{d}$ Yee beeause off thy wordes that thou hast spoken agaynst him, thou shalt be dryuen awaye. Ye Moabites shal leaue the cities, and dwell in rockes off stone, and become like doues, that make their nestes in holes.

As for Moabs pryde, we haue herde off it, she is very hie mynded. 'I knowe hir stoutnesse, hir boostinge, hir arogācy and the pryde off hir stomack, saieth the LORDE. For hir furiousnes maye nether vpholde hir with strength, ner dede. Therfore shal there mournynge be made for Moab, and euery mā shal crie for Moabs sake: a lamentacion shalbe made, to the men that stonde vpon the wall. So will I mourne for the also (o Iazer) and for the, O thou vynyarde off Sybma.

Thy wye braūches shal come ouer ỳ see, and the braunches off lazer but vito the see: the destroyer shall breake in to thy haruest and grape gatheringe. Myrth and cheare shalbe taken awaye from the tymbre felde, and from the whole londe off Moab.

There shall be no swete wyne in the presse, the treader shall haue no stomacke to crie, yee there shall be none to cric vnto him: which afore tyme were herde from hesebon to Eleale and loaz, which lifted vp their voyce from Zoar vnto Horonaim, that bullock off thre yeare olde. The waters also off Nemrim shalbe dried rp.

Moroner I will make Moab ceasse (saieth the LORDE) from the offringes and censinge that she hath made vnto hir goddes in hie places. Wherfore my herte mourneth for Moab, like a crowde playenge an heuy songe: and for the mens sake off the bricke wall my herte mourneth also, $f$ euen as a pype, that pipeth a dolefull songe : for they shalbe very fewe, and destroyed.

Who so escapeth the feare, shal fall in the pyt: and who so getteth out off the pyt, shall be taken in the snare. ${ }^{\text {c }}$

For I will bringe a yeare off visitacion vpon Moab, saieth the LORDE. They that are able to fle, shall stonde vnder the shadowe off Hesebon. For there shall go a fyre out off Hesebon, and a flame from Sion, os shall burne vp that proude people off Moab, both before and behynde.

Wo be vnto the (o Moab) for thou people off Chamos shalt perish: Yee thy sonnes and doughters shall be led awaye captyue. Yet at the last will I bringe Moab out off captiuyte agayne, saieth the LORDE. Thus farre off the plage off Moab.

Lahel shalbe desolate, and hir cities brent vp : and the Israelites shall be lordes oner those, that had the in possession afore, saieth the LORDE. Hesebon shall mourne, for it shal be roted out off the grounde, saieth the LORDE. The cities off Rabath shall crie out, and gyrde them selues with sack cloth: they shall mourne, and runne aboute the walles: for their kynge shall be led awaye presoner: yee his preestes and prynces with him.

But I will make Esan bare, and discouer his secretes, so that he shall not be able to hyde them. His sede shalbe waisted awaye, yee his brethren and his neghbours, ad he himselff shall not be left behinde.

Thou shalt leaue thy fatherlesse children behinde the, ${ }^{f}$ and I will kepe them and thy wydowes shall take their comforth in me. For thus hath the LORDE spoken: Beholde, they that men thought were vnmete to drinke of the cuppe, haue dronken with the first: and thynkest thou then to be fre?

No, no: thou shalt nether be quyte nor fre, but thon must drynke also: For why, I haue sworne by my selff (saieth the LORDE) that Bosra shall become a wyldernesse, an open shame, a laughinge stocke and cursynge : and hir cities shalbe a coutinuall deserte.

For lam perfectly infourmed of the LORDE, that he hath sent a message all ready vito the Heithen. Gather you together, and go forth agaynst them: make you ready to the battayle, for $\mathrm{lo}:{ }^{8}$ I will make the but small amonge the Heithen, and litle regarded amonge men.

Hasor also shall be a dwellinge for Dragons, and an enerlastinge wildernesse: so that no body shal dwell there, and no man shal haue there his habitacion.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE ${ }^{\text {s }}$ spake to the prophet Ieremy concernynge Elam, in the begynnynge of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda. And there shal be no people, but some of Elam shal fle vnto them.

For I wil cause Elam be afrayed of their enemies, a of them that seke their lyues: a wil bringe yo them the indignacion of my wrath, saieth the LORDE. And I wil persecute them with the swearde so longe til I haue brought them to naught. I wil set my stole in Elam, I wil destroye both the kinge a $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ prynces from thence, saieth the LORDE. But in processe of tyme, I wil bringe Elam out of captiuyte agayne, saieth the LORDE.

Tbe bi．Chapter．

BECAUSE of the synnes that ye haue done agaynst God，${ }^{d}$ ye shal be led awaye captyue vnto Babilon，euen off Nabuchodo－ nosor the kynge of Babilon．So when ye be come in to Babilon，ye shall remayne there many yeares，and for a longe season：namely， vij．generacions：$\tau$ after that wil 1 bringe you awaye peaceably from thēee．Now shal ye se [^686]in Babilō, goddes of golde, of syluer, of wodd and of stone: borne vpon mens shulders, to cast out a fearfulnes before the Heithen. But loke that ye do not as the other: be not ye afrayed, and let not the feare of them ouercome you.

Therfore, when ye se the multitude of people worshippinge them behinde a before, saye ye in youre hertes: 0 LORDE, it is thou, that oughtest only to be worshipped? "Myne angel also shal be with you, and I myself wil care for youre soules. As for the tymbre of those goddes, $\mathfrak{y}$ carpēter hath polisshed them: yee gylted be they, \& layed ouer with syluer, yet are they but vayne thinges, as can not speake. Like as a wench $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ loueth peramours is trymly deckte, euen so are these made a hanged with golde. Crownes of golde verely haue their goddes vpon their heades: so the prestes them selues take the golde and syluer from them, a put it to their owne vses: yee they geue of the same vnto harlottes, $\bar{a} \mathrm{~d}$ trymme their whores withall: Agayne, they take it from the whores, and decke their goddes therwith. Yet can not these goddes delyuer them selues from rust and mothes. ${ }^{\circ}$ Whe they haue couered them with clothynge off purple, they wype their faces for the dust of the temple, wherof their is moch amoge the. One hath a sceptre in his honde, as though he were iudge of the countre: yet can he not slaye soch as offende him. Another hath a swearde or an axe in his honde, for all that, is he nether able to defende him selfe from batayll, ner fro murtherers.

By this ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: therfore se $\stackrel{t}{y}$ ye nether worshipe them, ner feare them. For like as a vessel $\frac{t}{y}$ a man vseth, is nothinge worth when it is broken, euen so is it with their goddes. When they be set vp in the temple, their eyes be full of dust, thorow the fete of those that come in. And like as $\dot{y}$ dores are shut in roūde aboute vpo him, y hath offended the kinge : Or as it were a deed body kepte besyde the graue: Euen so the prestes kepte the dores with barres and lockes, lest their goddes be spoyled with robbers. They set up cädels before the (yee verely and $\frac{t}{y}$ many) wherof they can not se one, but euen as blockes, so stonde they in the temple. It is sayde, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the serpentes and wormes, which come off the earthy gnawe out their hertes, eatinge them d their clothes also, and yet they fele it not. Their faces are blacke, thorow the smoke $\frac{t}{y}$ is in the temple. The oules, swalowes a byrdes fle ypon them, yee and the cattes runne ouer their heades.

By this ye maye be sure, that they are not $\equiv$ goddes, therfore feare them not. The golde that they haue, is to make them beutifull: for all that, excepte some body dight off their rust, they wil geue no shyne: and when they were cast in to a fourme, they felt it not. They are bought for money, and haue no breth off life within them. They must be borne ypon mens shulders, as those that haue no fete: wherby they declare vnto men, that they be nothynge worth. Confounded be they then, that worshipe them. For yf they fall to the grounde, they can not ryse vp agayne of the selues: Yee though one helpe them vp and set them right, yet are they not able to stonde alone: but must haue proppes set vnder them, like deed men. As for the thinge that is offred vnto them, their prestes sell it, $\bar{a} d$ abuse it: yee the prestes wyues take therof, but vnto the sicke and poore they geue nothinge of it, the women with childe a the mēstruous laye hondes of their offerynges. By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therfore be not ye afrayde of them. From whence cometh it thē, that they be called goddes? The women syt before the goddes of syluer, golde and wodde, and the prestes syt in their temples, hauynge open clothes, whose heades and beerdes are shauen, and haue nothige vpon their heades: roaringe and cryenge vpon their goddes, as men do at the feast, when one is deed.

The prestes also take awaye the garmentes of the ymages, and decke their wyues a children withall. Whether it be good or euell $\frac{t}{y}$ eny man do vato them, they are not able to recompence it: they can nether set vp a kynge, ner put him downe. In like maner they maye nether geue riches, ner rewarde euell. Though a man make a vowe vnto them ad kepe it not, they wil not requyre it. ${ }^{c}$ They can not restore a blyude mā to his sight, ner helpe eny mā at his nede. They cā shewe no mercy to the wyddowe, ner do good to $\dot{y}$ fatherles. Their goddes of wodd, stone, golde t syluer, are but euen as other stones, $\frac{\underset{y}{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ be hewe of $\mathfrak{y}$ mountayne. They $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ worshipe the, shal be cöfounded. How shulde they then be taken for gotkles? yee how darre men call the goddes? And tliough the caldees worshiped the not, hearinge $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they were but domme a coude not speake: Yet they them selues offre vnto Bel, and wolde fayne haue him to speake: as who saye, they coude fele, y maye not moue. But when these me come to vaderstödinge, they shall forsake them, for df their goddes have no felinge. A greate sorte off women gyrded with coardes, syt in the stretes, $\frac{\pi}{\text { burne olyue beries. Now yf one off }}$ them be conveyed awaye, a lye with eny soch as come by: she casteth hir neghburesse in the teth, because she was not so worthely reputed, ner hir coorcle broken. What so euer is done for them, it is but in vayne ād lost: How maye it the be thought or sayde, ${ }_{y}^{5}$ they are goddes? Carpenters a goldsmythes make the., nether be they eny other thinge, but euen what the worke men wil make of them. Yee the goldsmithes them selues that make the, are of no longe cōtynuaunce: How shulde then the thiges that are made of them, be goddes? Vayne therfore are the thinges (yee very shame is it) that they leaue behinde the for their posterite. For as soone as there cömeth eny warre or plage ipon thē, then the prestes ymagyn, where they maye byde the selues with the. How can men thynke then, that they be goddes, which nether maye defende them selues from warre, ner delyuer the fro mysfortune? For seynge they be but of wodd, of stone, of syluer and of golde: all people a kynges shal knowe herafter, that they be but vayne thinges: yee it shalbe openly declared, that they be no goddes: but euen the very workes off mēs hōdes, a that God hatl nothinge to do with the. They can set no kynge in the londe ner geue rayne vnto men. They can geue no sentence of a matter, nether defende the londe fro wronge: For they are not able to do so moch as a crowe, that Hyeth betwixte heuen and earth. of those goddles of wodde, of syluer and of golde, the prestes wil escape ts saue the selues, but the goddes burne as the balkes therin. They can not withstōde eny kynge or batell: how maye it then be thought or graunted, that they be gortles? Morouer, these goddes of wodde, of stone, of golde a syluer maye nether defende the selues from theues ner robbers: yee $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ very wicked are stronger the they. These strype them out off their apparell, that they be clothed withall, these take their golde a syluer frō thē, and so get the awaye: yet eal they not helpe the selues. Therfore it is moch better for a man, to be a kinge t so to shewe his power: or els a profitable vessel in a house, wherin he $\dot{y}$ oweth it, might haue pleasure: yee or to be a dore in a house, to kepe soch thinges safe as be therin: the to be soch a vayne god. The Sōne, the Mone $\pi$ all the starres when they gene their shyne t light, are obedient, t do men good: When the lightenynge glistreth, all is cleare: The wyde bloweth in euery countre, at whe God comaundeth the cloudes to go rounde aboute the whole worlde, they do as they are bydden: when the fyre is sent downe fro aboue 〔 comaunded, it burneth rp hilles ād wodldes: But as for those goddes, they are not like one off these thynges, nether in beuty ner strēgth. Wherfore mè shulde not thynke, ner saye that they be goddes, seynge they ca nether geue sentence in indgment, ner do men good. For so moch now as ye are sure, that they be no goddes, then feare them not: For they can nether speake euell ner good of kynges. They cā shewe no tokens in heauē for y y Heithen, nether shyne as the Sōne, ner geue light as the Mone: yee ${ }^{\circ}$ vnreasonable beastes are better then they: for they can get the moder the rofe, and do them selues good: So can ye be certified by no maner off meanes, that they be goddes: therfore feare the not. For like as a frayboggarde in a garden off Cucumbers kepeth nothinge, euen so are their goddes of wod, of syluer a golde: and like as a whyte thorne in an orcharde, that euery byrde sytteth vpon: yee like as a deed body that is east in the darcke, Euen so is it with those goddes of wodde, syluer and golde. By the purple and scarlet which they haue vpon the $\overline{\text {, a }}$ a soone faydeth awaye, ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: yee they them selues shal be cossumed at the last, which shal be a greate cōfucion of the londe. Blessed is the godly man, $\dot{y}$ hath no ymages © worshippeth none, for he shalbe farre from reprofe.

 off the fourth Moneth, that I was amonge the presoners by the ryuer off Cobar: where the heauens opened, $\mathbb{t}$ I sawe a vision of God. Now the fifth daye off the Moneth made out the fyfth yeare off kynge Ioachims captiuyte. At the same tyme came $\dot{y}$ worde off the LORDE unto Ezechiel the sonne off Buzi prest, in the londe off the Caldees by the water of Cobar, where the honde off the LORDE came upō him. "And I loked: a beholde, a stormy wynde came out off the north with a greate cloude full of fyre, which with his glistre lightened all rounde aboute.And in $\dot{y}$ myddest off the fyre it was all cleare, and as it were the licknesse of foure beastes, which were fashioned like a man: sanynge, that euery one had foure faces and foure wyinges.
it had bene fayre scoured metall. Vnder their wynges ypon all the foure corners, they had mens hondes. Their faces and their wynges were towarde the foure corners: yet were the wynges so, that one euer tonched another. ${ }^{8}$ When they wente, they turned them not aboute: but ech one wente straight forwarde.

Vpon the right side off these foure, their faces were like the face off a man and the face off a Lyon: But rpon the left side, they had the face off an oxe and the face off an Aegle.

Their faces also and their wynges were spred out aboue: so that two wynges off one touched euer two wynges off another, and with the other two they couered their bodie. Euery one when it wente, it wente straight forwarde.

Where as the sprete led them, thither they wente, ' and turned not aboute in their goynge.

The fashion and countenaūce of the beestes was like hote coales off fyre, euen as though burnynge cresshettes had bene amonge the beestes: and the fyre gaue a glistre, and out [^687]off the fyre there wente lighteninge. Whē $\hat{y}$ beestes wēte forwarde a backwarde, one wolde haue thought it had lightened. Now whē I had well considered the beestes, I sawe a worke off wheles vpou the earth with foure faces also like the beestes.

D. The fashion a worke of the wheles was like the see. The foure wheles were ioyned and made (to loke vpon) as it had bene one whele in another. When one wente forwarde, they wente all foure, and turned thē not aboute ì their goinge. They were large, greate and horrible to loke vpon.

Their bodies were full off eyes rounde aboute them all foure. Whe the beestes wēte, the wheles wente also with them: And when the beestes lift them selues vp from $\hat{y}$ earth, the wheles were lift vp also. Whyther so euer the sprete wente, thither wente they also, © $\hat{y}$ wheles were lift $\mathrm{vp} \pi$ folowed thé, for $\hat{y}$ sprete of life was in the wheles. When $\hat{y}$ beestes wēte forth, stode still, or lift them selues vp from the earth: then the wheles also wente, stode still, $\mathbb{\pi}$ were lift vp, for $\hat{y}$ breth off life was in the wheles.
Aboue ouer $y$ y heades of the beestes there was a firmament, which was fashioned as it had bene off the most pure Christall, $\frac{8}{}$ that was spred out aboue vpon their heades: vnder the same firmament were their wynges layed abrode, one towarde another, and two wynges couered the body of euery beest. And when they wente forth, I herde the noyse off their wynges, like the noyse of greate waters, as it had bene the voyee off the greate God, and a russhinge together as it were off an hoost off men. And when they stode still, they let downe their winges. Now when they stode still, and had letten downe their wynges, it thondred in the firmament, that was aboue their heades.

Aboue the firmament that was ouer their heades, there was the fashion off a seate, as it had bene made off Saphir. Apon the seate there sat one like a mā. I behelde him, and he was like a eleare light, as it had bene all of fyre with in from his loynes vpwarde.

And beneth when I loked vpon him vnder $\hat{y}$ loynes, me thought he was like a shyninge fyre, that geueth light on euery syde. Yee the shyne and glistre $\dot{y}$ lightened rounde aboute, was like a raynbowe, which in a raynie daye apeareth in the cloudes. Eué so was the similitude, wherin the glory off the LORDE apeared. Whe I sawe it, I fell vpon my face, and herkened vnto the voyce off him, that spake.

$\mathfrak{C y s} \mathfrak{i j}$. Chapter.

THEN sayde he vnto me: Stonde vp a rpon thy fete ( O thou somne of mā) and I will talke with the. ${ }^{\text {a }}$ And as he was commonynge with me, the sprete came in to me, and set me vp vpon my fete : so that I mareked the thinge, that he sayde vnto me. And he sayde: Belolde, thou sonne off man : I will sende the to the children off Israel, to those rumagates and obstinate people: for they haue takē parte agaynst me, and are runne awaye fro me: both they, ${ }^{b}$ and their forefathers, vnto this daye.

Yee I will sende $\hat{y}$ vnto a people $\dot{y}$ haue rough vysages and stiff stomackes: vnto whom thou shalt saye on this maner: This the LORDE God himselff hath spoken, $\dot{y}$ whether they be obedient or no (for it is a frauwarde housholde) they maye knowe yet that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

Therfore (thou some off man) feare the not, nether be afrayed off their wordes: 'for they shall rebell agaynst the, and despise $\mathfrak{y}$. Yee thou shalt dwell amonge scorpions: but feare not their wordes, be not abashed at their lokes, for it is a franwerde housholde.

Se that thou speake my wordes vnto them, whether they be obediēt or not, for they are obstinate. Therfore (thou sonne of man) obeye thou all thinges, that I saye vnto $\hat{y}$, and be not thou stiffneeked, like as they are a stiffneeked housholde. Open thy mouth, and eate that I geue the.
So as I was lokynge vp, beholde, there was sent vito me an hande, wherin was a closed boke: ${ }^{d}$ and the hande opened it before me, and it was written within and without, full off earefull mourninges: alas, and wo.

I herde also the noyse off the wynges off the beestes, that russhed one agaynst another, yee and the ratlynge off the wheles, that were by them, which russhinge a noyse was very greate.

aT happened, that in the sixte yeare, the fifth daye of the sixte Moneth I sat in my house, and the lordes off the councell off Iuda with me: and the honde off the LORDE God fell euen there rpo me.

And as 1 loked vp, 1 sawe as it were a licknesse off fyre from his loynes downwarde, ${ }^{5}$ and from his loynes vpwarde it shyned maruchous cleare.
'This symilitude stretched out an honde, and toke me by the hayrie lockes off my heade, and the sprete lift me vp betwixte heauen and earth: and God brought me in a vision to lerusalem, in to the courte off the inwarde porte that lieth towarde the north: there stode an ymage, with whom he that hath all thinges in his power, was very wroth.

And beholde, the glory off the God off brael was in the same place: 'euē as 1 had sene it afore in the felde. And he sayde vinto me: Thou somne off man, $O$ lift vp thine eyes, and loke towarde the north. 'Then lift l' yp myne eyes towarde the north, and beholle: Besyde the porte northwarde, there was an aulter made vinto the ymage off prouocacion in the very entrynge in.

Aut he sayde furthermore vato me: Thou sonne off man, Seist thou what these do? Seist thou the greate abhominacions that the house off lsrael commytte in this place? which ought not to be done in my sanetuary?

But turne the abonte, and thou shalt se get greater abhominacions. And with that brought he me to the courte gate: and whe I loked, beholde, there was an hole in the wall.

[^690]Then sayde he vinto me: Thou sonme off $\mathbf{x i}$ man, dygge thorow the wall. And when I dygged thorow the wall, beholde, there was a dore. And he sayde vnto me: go thy waye in, a loke what wicked abhominacions they do there.

So I wente in, and sawe: and beholde, there were all maner ymages off wormes a beastes, all ldols and abhominacions of $\dot{y}$ house off Israel paynted enerychone rounde aboute the wall.
${ }^{d}$ There stode also before the ymages lxx. lordes of the conncell off the house off Israel : and in the myddest off them stode Iaasanias the somne off Saphan: And euery one off them had a censoure in his honde, © out off the incense, there wente a smoke, as it had bene a clonde.
'Then sayde he vnto me: 'Thou sonne off man, ${ }^{e}$ hast thou sene what the Senatours off the house off lsrael do secretly, euery one in his ehambre? For they saye: Tush, the LORDE seth vs not, the LORDE regardeth not the worlde. And he sayde vinto me: Turne the yet agayne, and thou shalt se the greate abhominacions that they do.

And with that, he brought me to the dore off the porte off the LORDES house, towarde the north. And beholde, there sat women nournyuge for Thamus. Then sayde he vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of mā? Turne $y$ aboute, th thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And so he brought me in to the inwarde courte of the LORDES house: a beholde, at the porte of the LOR DES house, betwixte the fore entrie and the aulter, there were fyue and twenty men, that turned their baekes ypon the Temple of the LORDE, a their faces towarde the easte, and these worshipped the Sonne.

And he sayde vato me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of man? Thinketh the house of Israel, that it is but a trifle, to do these abhominaeions here? Shulde they fyll the londe full of wickednesse, and vndertake to prouoke me vito anger? Yee a purposly to cast vp their noses vpon me? Therfore wil l also do some thinge in my wrothfull displeasure, so that myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether wil I spare them. f Yee and though they crie in myne eares with loude voyce, yet wil I not heare them.

So they wete out and slewe downe thorow $\dot{y}$ eite. Now when they had done $\stackrel{g}{y}$ slaughter, © I yet escaped: I fell downe vpon my face, t cried, sayenge: O LORDE, wilt thou then destroye all the resydue of Israel, in thy sore displeasure, that thou hast poured vpō Ierusalem?

Therfore will I ypon them, myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether will I spare them, but will recompence their wickednesse vpon their heades.

And beholde, the max that had the lynnynge

$A$ND as I loked, beholde, $\ln$ the firma- a ment that was aboue the Cherubins there apeared the similitude of a stole of Saphir vpó them: "Then sayde he that sat therin, to him that had the lynnynge rayment ypon him: Crepe in betwene the wheles that are inder the Cherubins, and take thine honde fill of hote coales out from betwene the Cherubins, and east them ouer the eite. And he erepte in, that I might se.

Now the Cherubins stode vpo the right syde of the house, when the man wēte in, and the cloude fylled the ynnermer courte. $s$ But the glory of the LORDE remoued from the Cherubins, and came vpon the thresholde of the house: so that the Temple was full of cloudes, and the courte was full of the shyne of the LORDES glory. also, were all full of eyes rounde aboute them all foure. And I herde him call $\dot{y}$ wheles, Galgal (that is) a rounde boull. Euery one of them had foure faces: so that the one face was the face of a Cherub, the scconde of a man, the thirde of a lyon, the fourth of an Aegle, © they were lifted yp aboue. This is the beest, that I sawe at the water of Cobar. Now when the Cherubins wente, the wheles wente with them: $\tau$ when the Cherubins shoke their wynges to lift them selues vpwarde, the wheles remayned not behynde, but were with them also. ${ }^{a}$ Then the glory of the LORDE was lift vp from the thresholde of the temple, and remayned vpon the Cherubins: And the Cherubins flackred with their wynges, and lift the selues up from the earth : so that I sawe when they went, and the wheles with them. And they stode at the east syde of the porte that is in the house of the LORDE. So the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. This is the beest that I sawe vnder the God of Israel, by the water of Cobar. And I perceaued, that it was the Cherubins. Euery one had foure faces, $\}$ euery one foure wynges, a rnder their winges, as it were mes hondes. ${ }^{a}$ MOROUER, the sprete of the LORDE lift me vp, a brought me vnto y east porte of the LORDES house. Tell them also, thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil gather you agayne out of the nacions, a bringe you from the countrees where ye be scatred, it will geue you the londe of Israel agayne: at thither shal ye come. And as for all impedimentes, © all youre abhominacions: I will take them awaye.

And I wil geue you one herte, a wil plante a new sprete within youre bowels. ${ }^{d}$ That stony herte wil I take out of youre body, © geue you a fleshy herte: that ye maye walke in my commaundementes, and kepe myne ordinaunces, d do them: that ye maye be my people, and

II youre God. But loke whose hertes are disposed to folowe their abhominacions and wicked lyuynges: Those mens dedes will I bringe vpon their owne heades, saieth the LORDE God. After this dyd the Cherubins lift vp their winges, and the wheles wente with them, and the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. ${ }^{a}$ So the glory of the LORDE wente vp from the myddest of the cite, ${ }^{b} \pi$ stode vpon the mount of the cite towarde the east. But the wynde toke me vp, $\pi$ in a vision (which came by the sprete of God) it brought me agayne in to Caldea amonge the presoners. Then the vision that I had sene, vanyshed awaye fro me. So I spake rnto the presoners, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had shewed me.

(T)e pij. (Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Thou sonne of mā, thou dwellest in the myddest of a frauwerde housholde: which have eyes to se, © yet se not: eares haue they to heare, and yet heare they not, for they are an obstinate housholde. Therfore ( $O$ thou sonne of man) make thy gere redy to flit, and go forth by fayre daye light, $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ they maye se. Yee eue in their sight shalt thon go from thy place to another place : yf peraduenture they wil considre, ${ }^{\mathrm{t}}$ they be an vnobedient housholde. Thy gere that thou hast made redy to flit withall, shalt thou beare out by fayre daye light, that they maie se: © thou thy self shalt go forth also at eue in their sight, as a mā doth whē he flitteth.

Dygge thorow the wall, that they maye se, and beare thorow it the same thinge, that thou tokest vp in their sight. As for thy self, thou shalt go forth in the darcke. Hyde thy face that thou se not $\dot{y}$ earth, for I hane made the a shewtoke vato the house of Israel. Now as $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE cōmaunded me, so $l$ dyd: $\mathfrak{y}$ gere that I had made redy, brought I out by daye. At euen I brake downe an hole thorow the wall with my honde: © when it was darcke, I toke the gere rpo my shulders, and bare them out in their sight.

And in the mornynge, came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, yf Israel, $\frac{\stackrel{t}{x}}{\mathrm{y}}$ frauwerde housholde axe the, and saye: what dost thou there? Then [^693]tell thern: Thus saieth the LORDE God: This punyshment toucheth the chefe rulers at Ierusalem, and all the house of Israel, that dwell amonge them: Tell them: I am youre shewtoken: like as 1 haue done, so shal it happen vnto you: Flyt shal ye also, and go in to captinyte. ${ }^{d}$ The chefest that is amonge you, shall lade his shulders in the darcke, and get him awaye. He shal breake downe the wall, to carie stuff there thorow: He shal coner his face, that he se not the grounde, with his eyes.

My lyne will I sprede out vpon him, and catch him in my net, ${ }^{e}$ and carie him to Babilon, in the lode of the Caldees: which he shal not se, $\pi$ yet shal he dye there. As for all his helpers, and all his hoostes that be aboute him: I will scatre them towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out a swearde after them. So when I haue scatred them amonge the Heithen, and strowed them in the londes: they shal knowe, that I am $\frac{8}{y}$ LORDE. But, I will leaue a litle nombre of them, from the swearde, hunger a pestilence: to tell all their abhominacions amonge the Heithen, where they come: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man: with a fear full trēblinge shalt thou eate thy bred, with carefulnesse a sorowe shalt thou drynke thy water. And vnto the people of the londe, speake thou on this maner: Thus saieth the LORDE God, to them that dwell in Ierusalem, and to the londe of Israel: Ye shall eate youre bred with sorowe, and drynke youre water with heuynesse: Yee the londe with the fulnesse therof shalbe layde waist, for $\hat{y}$ wickednesse of them that dwell therin. And the cities that now be well occupied, shal be voyde, and the londe desolate: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Yet came the worde of the LORDE into me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, what maner of byworde is that, $g^{g}$ which ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: Tush, seynge that the daies are so slacke in commynge, ${ }^{h}$ all the visiōs are of none effecte: Tell them therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil make that byworde to ceasse, so that it shall nomore be comonly vsed in Israel.

[^694]But save this vnto them: The daies are at honde, that euery thinge which hath bene prophecied, shalbe fulfilled. There shall no rision be in vayne, nether eny prophecie fayle amonge the children of Israel: For it is 1 the LORDE, that speake it: and what so euer I y LORDE speake, it shal be perfourmed, and not be slacke in commynge.

Yee enen in youre dayes ( $O$ ye frauwarde housholde) will I deuyse some thinge, a bringe it to passe, saieth the LORDE Gool. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man: The house of Israel saye in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath sene, it will be many a daye or it come to passe : It is farre of yet, the thinge that he prophecieth. Therfore saye vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE God : All my wordes shal nomore be slacke: Loke what I speake, that same shal come to passe, saieth the LORDE.

${ }^{\text {a }}$ THE worde of the LORDE came rnto me, sayēge: 'Thou sonne of man, Speake prophecie agaynst those prophetes, that preach in Israel : a saye thou vnto them that prophecie out of their owne hertes: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saieth the LORDE God: ${ }^{a}$ Wo be vito those folish prophetes, that folowe their owne sprete, and speake, where they se nothinge. O Israel, thy prophetes are like the foxes vpon the drie felde: For they stonde not in the gappes, nether make they an hedge for the house of Israel, ${ }^{b}$ that me might abyde the parell in the daye of the LORDE. Vayne thinges they sc, ${ }^{5}$ tell lies, to mayntene their preachinges withall. The LORDE (saye they) hath spoke it, when in very dede the LORDE hath not sent them. Vayne visios have ye sene, a spoke false prophecies, when ye saye: the LORDE hath spoken it, where as I neuer sayde it.

Shal it not then be sayde vnto you: where is now the morter, that ye dawbed it withall? Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: I will breake out in my wrothfull displeasure with a stormy wynde, so that in myne anger there shal come a mightie shuwer of rayne, $\pi$ hale stones in my wrath, to destroye withall.

As for $\mathfrak{y}$ wall, that ye have dawbed with vntempered morter, I wil breake it downe, a make it eauen with the grounde: so that the foundacion therof shal remoue, © it shal fall, yee a ye youre selues shall perish in the myddest therof: to lerne you for to knowe, that 1 am the LORDE. THERE resorted vnto me certayne of $\dot{y}$ elders of Israel, ${ }^{\circ}$ a sat downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: 'Thou sonne of man, these men beare their Idols in their hertes, a go purposly vpon the stomblinge block of their owne wickednesse: how darre they then axe councell at me? Therfore speake vnto them, a saye: thus saieth the LORDE God: Euery man of the house of Israel that beareth his Idols in his herte, purposynge to stomble in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, to enquere eny thinge at me by him : vnto that man wil I the LORDE myself geue answere, acordinge to the multitude of his Idols: that the house of Israel maye be snared in their owne hertes, because they be clene gone fro me, for their Idols sakes.

Wherfore, tell the house of Israel : thus saieth the LORDE God: ${ }^{i}$ Be conuerted, forsake youre Idols, and turne youre faces from all youre abhominacions. For euery man (whether he be of the house of Israel, or a stranger, that sogeourneth in Israel) which departeth fro me, and carieth Idols in his herte, purposinge to go still stomblinge in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, for to axe councell at me thorow him: vnto $\frac{t}{y}$ man wil I the LORDE geue answere, by myne owne self.

Or, yf I bringe a swearde in to the londe, and charge it to go thorow the londe: so that I slaye downe man and beest in it, and yf these thre men were therin: As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE God) they shal delyuer nether somes ner doughters, but only be saued them selues.

AGAYNE, the worde of the LORDE spake vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, shewe the cite of Ierusalem their abhominacions, and saye: thus saieth the LORDE God vnto Ierusalem: Thy progeny and kynred came out of the londe of Canaan, thy father was an Amorite, thy mother a Cethite. In $\dot{y}$ daye of thy byrth when thou wast borne, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ stringe of thy nauel was not cut of : thou wast not bathed in water to make the clene: Thou wast nether rubbed with salt, ner swedled in cloutes: No man regarded the so moch, as to do eny of these thinges for $\hat{y}$, or to shewe the soch fauoure, but thou wast [^696]vtterly cast out vpon $\hat{y}$ felde, yee despised wast thou in the daye of thy byrth.

Then came I by the, and sawe the troden downe in thine owne bloude, $\boldsymbol{y}$ sayde vnto the: thou shalt be pourged from thine owne bloude, frō thine owne bloude (I saye) shalt thou be clensed. ${ }^{b}$ So I planted the, as the blossome of thy felde: thou art growen vp, © waxe greate : thou hast gotten a maruelous pleasaunt beutie, thy brestes are come vp , thy hayre is goodly growen, where as thou wast naked and bare afore.

Now when I wente by $\dot{y}$, , loked vpon the: beholdc, thy tyme was come, yee euē the tyme to wowe the. Then spred I my clothes ouer the, to couer thy dishonestie: ${ }^{\text {t }}$ Yee 1 made an ooth vnto the, $r$ maried my self with the (saieth the LORDE God) a so thou becamest myne owne. Then waszshed I the with water, © pourged thy bloude from the. I anoynted the with oyle, I gaue the chaunge of raymentes, 1 made the shues of Taxus lether: I gyrthed $\dot{y}$ aboute with white sylcke, I clothed the with kerchues, I decked the with costly apparell, I put rynges vpon thy fyngers: a chayne aboute thy necke, spāges vpō thy foreheade, eare rynges vpon thyne eares, © set a beutifull crowne vpon thine heade. Thus wast thou deckte with syluer a golde, a thy rayment was of fyne white sylke, of nedle worke © of dyuerse colours.

Thou didest eate nothinge but symnels, honny r oyle: maruelous goodly wast thou a beutifull, yee euen a very Quene wast thou: In so moch, that thy beuty was spoken of amnonge the Heithen, for thou wast excellēt in my beuty, which I put vpō the, saieth the LORDE God. But thou hast put confidèce in thine owne beuty, © played the harlot, when thou haddest gotten the a name. Thou hast committed whordome, with all that wente by the, ${ }^{\text {r }}$ hast fulfilled their desyres: Yee thou hast taken thy garmētes of dyuerse colours, « deckte thine aulters therwith, ${ }^{d}$ where vpon thou mightest fulfill thine whordome, of soch a fashion, as neuer was done, ner shalbe. 'The goodly ornamétes © Iewels which I gaue the of myne owne golde and syluer, hast thou takē, © made the més ymages therof, and committed whordome withall.

Thy garmentes of dyuerse colours hast thou

[^697]taken, and deckte them therwith: myne oyle a incense hast thou set before them. My meate which I gaue the, as symnels, oyle a hony: (to fede the withall) that hast thou set before them, for a swete sauoure. And this came also to passe, saieth the LORDE God:
Thou hast takē thine owne sonnes a doughters, whom thou haddest begotten vnto me: "and these hast thou offred vp vato them, to be their meate. Is this but a small whordome of thine (thinkest thou) that thou slayest my children, and geuest them ouer, to be brēt vnto them? And yet in all thy abhominacions and whordome, thou hast not remembred the dayes of thy youth, how naked and bare thou wast at that tyme, $\mathbb{a}$ troden downe in thine owne bloude. After all these thy wickednesses (wo wo vnto the, saieth ý LORDE) thou hast buylded thy stewes and brodel houses in euery place: yee at the heade of euery strete hast thou buylded the an aulter. Thou hast made thy beuty to be abhorred: thou hast layed out thy legges to euery one that came by, and multiplied thine whordome. ${ }^{b}$ Thou hast committed fornicacion with the Egipcians thy neghbours, which had moch flesh : © thus hast thou vsed thine whordome, to anger me.

Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde ouer the, and wil mynish thy stoare of fode, and delyuer the ouer in to the willes of the Philistynes thine enemies, which are ashamed of thy abhominable waye. 'Thou hast played the whore also with the Assirians, which might not satisfie the: Yee thou hast played the harlot, a not had ynough. Thus hast thou still cōmitted thy fornicacion from the londe of Canaan unto the Caldees, and yet thy lust not satisfied. How shulde I circumcide thine herte (saieth the LOLDE God) seinge thou doest all these thinges, thou precious whore : buyldinge thy stewes at the heade of euery strete, and thy brodel houses in all places? Thou hast not bene as an other whore, $\dot{y}$ maketh booste of hir wymynge: but as a wife $\dot{y}$ breaketh wedlocke, $\tau$ taketh other in steade of hir huszbōde. Giftes are geuen to all other whores, but thou geuest rewardes vito all thy louers: © offrest them giftes, to come vnto the out of all places, $\mathbb{t}$ to committe fornicacio with the. It is come to passe with the in thy whordomes, contrary to the vse of other [^698]women: yee there hath no soch fornicacion bene committed after the, seinge that thou profrest giftes vnto other, a no rewarde is geuen the: this is a contrary thinge. Therfore heare the worde of the LORDE, o thou harlot: Thus saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast spét thy moneye, § discouered thy shame, thorow thy whordone with all thy louers, and with all the Idols of thy abhominacions in the bloude of thy children, whom thou hast geuen them: ${ }^{\text {a }}$ Beholde therfore, I wil gather together all thy louers, vnto whom thou hast made thy self comon: yee a all them whom thou fauourest, and euery one that thou hatest : 'and will discouer thy shame before thē, that they all maye se thy fylthines.

Morouer, I wil iudge the as a breaker of wedlocke and a murthurer, and recompence the thine owne bloude in wrath and gelousy. I wil geue the ourer in to their power, that shal breake downe thy stewes, and destroye thy brodel houses: they shal stripe the out of thy clothes, all thy fayre a beutifull Iewels shal they take from the, and so let the syt naked a bare: 'Yee they shal bringe the comon people vpon the, which shal stone the, © slaye the downe with their sweardes. They shall burne vp thy houses, and punysh the in the sight of many womē. Thus wil I make thy whordome to ceasse, so that thou shalt geue out no mo rewardes.

Shulde I make nny wrath to be still, take my gelousy from the, be content, and nomore to be displeased? seinge thou remembrest not the dayes of thy youth, but hast prouoked me to wrath in all these thinges? Beholde therfore, I wil bringe thine owne wayes vpon thine heade, saieth the LORDE God: how be it, I neuer dyd mito the, acordinge to thy wickednesse and all thy abhominacions. Beholde, all they $\frac{t}{y}$ vse comon prouerbes, shall vse this prouerbe also agaynst the: Soch a mother, soch a doughter.
Thou art euen thy mothers owne doughter, that hath cast of hir houszbonde and hir children : Yee thou art the sister of thy sisters, which forsoke their huszbōdes and their children. ${ }^{\text {b }}$ Youre mother is a Cethite, and youre father an Amorite. Thine eldest sister is Samaria, she and hir doughters that dwel vpo thy left honde.

[^699]But thy yongest sister that dwelleth on thy right höde, is Sodoma and hir doughters. Yet hast thou not walked after their wayes, ner done after their abhominacions: But in all thy wayes thou hast bene more corrupte then they.
${ }^{\text {a }}$ As truly as 1 lyue, saicth the LORDE God: Sodona thy sister with hir doughters, hath not done so eucl, as thou and thy doughters. Beholde, the symnes of thy sister Sodoma were these: Pryde, fulnesse of meate, abundaunce and ldilnesse : these thinges had she and hir doughters. Besydes that, they reacled not their honde to the poore and nedy, but were proude, and dyd abhominable thinges before me: ${ }^{\circ}$ therfore I toke them awaye, when I had sene it. 'Nether hath Samaria done half of thy synnes, yee thou hast exceaded them in wickednesse: In so moch that in comparison of all the abhominacions which thou hast done, thou hast made thy sisters good women. Therfore beare thine owne shame, thou that in synne hast ouercome thy sisters : seinge thou hast done so abhominably, that they were better then thou. Be ashamed therfore (I saye) and beare thine owne confucion, thou that makest thy sisters good women.
As for their captiuyte, namely the captiuyte of Sodoma and hir doughters: the captiuyte If of Samaria and hir doughters: I wil bringe them agayne, so will I also bringe agayne thy captiuyte amōge them: that thou mayest take thine owne confucion ypon the, and be ashamed of all that thou hast done, and to comforte them.

Thus thy sisters (namely) Sodoma and hir doughters: Samaria and hir doughters with thy self © thy doughters, shalbe brought agayne to yourc olde estate. Whē thou wast in thy pryde, and before thy wickednesse came to light : thou woldest not heare speake of thy sister Sodoma, vntill the tyme that the Sirians with all their townes, and the Philistynes with all that lye rounde aboute them, brought the to shame and confucion : that thou mightest beare thine owne fylthynes and abhominacion, saieth the LORDE.

For thus saieth the LORDE God: I shulde (by right) deale with the, as thou hast done. Thou hast despysed the ooth, and broken the couenaunte. Neuertheles, I wil [^700]remembre the couenaunt, that I made with the in thy youth, in so moch that it shall be an euerlastinge couenaunt : So that thou also remembre thy wayes, and be ashamed of thé: then shalt thou receaue of me thy elder and yonger sisters, whom I wil make thy doughters, and that besyde thy couenaunt. ${ }^{d}$ And so I wil renue my couenaunt with the, $\dot{y}$ thou mayest knowe, that 1 an the LORDE: that thou mayest thincke vpō it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confucion nomore : when I have forgeuen the, all that thou hast done, saieth the LORDE God.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge : Thou sonne of man : put forth a darcke speakynge and a parable, ${ }^{e}$ vnto the house of Israel, and saye: ${ }^{f}$ Thus saieth the LORDE God: There came a greate Aegle with greate wynges, yee with mightie longe wynges, and full of fethers of dyuerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a braunch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it in to the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchauntes. He toke also a braunch of the londe, and planted it in a frutefull grounde, he brought it vnto greate waters, © set it as a willye tre therby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greate wyne stocke, but lowe by the grounde : thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, $\mathbb{\text { c }}$ spred out braunches.
But there was another Aegle, a greate one, which had greate wynges and many fethers: and beholde, $\dot{y}$ rotes of this syne had an hüger after him, and spred out his braunches towarde him, to water his frutes: Neuertheles it was plāted vpon a good grounde besyde greate waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. Speake thou therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: Shal this vyne prospere? shal not his rotes be pluckte out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches wythereed and fade awaye? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planted: shall it prospere therfore? Shall it not be dryed vp and withered, yee euen in the shutinge out of his blossomes, as soone as $\dot{y}$ east wynde bloweth ?

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: ${ }^{a}$ Speake to that frauwarde housholde : knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the kinge of Babilon came to Ierusalem, and toke the kinge a his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the kinges sede, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an ooth of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subieccion, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from him, ๔ sent his Embassitours in to Egipte, that he might haue horses a moch people. Shulde that prospere? Shulde he be kepte safe, that doth soch thinges? Or shulde he escape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saieth the LORDE God: He shal dye at Babilon, in $\dot{y}$ place where the kinge dwelleth, that made him kinge: whose ooth he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he lath broken. Nether shall Pharao with his greate hoost and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: when they cast rp diches, and set vp bulworkes to destroye moch people. For seinge he hath despysed the ooth, and broken the couenaunt (where as he yet gaue his honde thervpon) and done all these thinges, he shall not escape.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will bringe myne ooth that he hath despysed, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne heade. ${ }^{b}$ I wil cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will 1 cary him, there will 1 punysh him, because of the greate offence that he made me. As for those $\frac{\dot{y}}{\dot{y}}$ fle from him out of $\dot{y}$ hoost, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. The residue shalbe scatred towarde all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that 1 the LORDE hane spoken it.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: I will also take a braunch from an hie Cedre tre, and will set it, and take the vppermost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill : Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greate Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye [^701]byde in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shall knowe, that I the LORDE haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vp: that 1 haue dryed vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to florish: Euen I the LORDE $\dot{y}$ spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto a me, on this maner: what meane ye by this comon prouerbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes, ${ }^{\text {' }}$ and the childrēs teth are set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saieth yُ LORDE God, ye shal vse this byworde nomore in Israel.
${ }^{d}$ Beholde, all soules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is $\dot{y}$ sonne myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. Then came the worde of the LORDE vato me on this maner : Thou sonne of man: Speake to the elders of Israel, and saye vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Are ye come hither to axe eny thinge at me? As truly as I lyue (sajeth the LORDE,) I will geue you no answere. Wilt thou not reproue them (thou sonne of man) wilt thou not reproue them? Shewe them the abhominacions of their forefathers, at tell the : Thus saieth the LORDE God: ${ }^{6}$ In the daye when I chose Israel, and lift vp myne honde vpon the sede of the house of lacob, a shewed my self vnto them in the londe of Egipte: Yee when I lifte yp myne honde ouer the , and sayde: I am the LORDE youre God, enen in the daye that I lift vp myne honde ouer them, to bringe them ont of the londe of Egipte: in to a londe that I had prouyded for them, which floweth with mylcke and hony, and is a pleasaunt lode amonge all other: Then sayde I vito them: 'Cast awaye euery man the abhominacions that he hath before him, and defyle not youre selues with the Idols of Egipte, for I am the LORDE youre God.
But they rebelled agaynst me, and wolde not folowe me: to cast awaye euery man the abhominacions of his eyes, and to forsake the Idols of Egipte. Then I made me to poure [^704]my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them: yee euen in the myddest of the londe of Egipte. But I wolde not do it, for my names sake: that it shulde not be vnhalowed before the Heithen, amonge whom they dwelt, and amonge whom I shewed my self vnto them, that I wolde bringe them out of the londe of Egipte. ## Ube rri. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face towarde lerusalem, speake agaynst the Sanctuary, $\mathbb{a}$ prophecie agaynst the londe of Israel, saye to the lode of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil vpon the, $\mathfrak{x}$ wil drawe my swearde out of y sheth, $\mathbb{t}$ rote out of $\dot{y}$ both the rightuous if the wicked. Seinge then that I will rote out of the both the rightuous a wicked, therfore shal my swearde go out of his sheth, agaynst all flesh from the north to the south: that all flesh maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue drawen my swearde out of the sheth, $₫$ it shal not be put in agayne.

Mourne therfore (o thou sonne of man) $\frac{t}{y}$ thy loynes crack withall, yee mourne bytterly for them: And yf they saye, wherfore mournest thou? Then tell them: for the tydinges that commeth, at the which all hertes shall melt, all hondes shal be letten downe, all stomackes shal faynte, and all knees shall waxe feble. Beholde, it commeth at shal be fulfilled, saieth the LORDE God.

Agayne, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophecie, and speake: Thus saieth the LORDE God: speake, the swearde is sharpened a wel scoured. Sharpened is it for the slaughter, a scoured $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ it maye be bright. ${ }^{s} \mathrm{O}$, the destroyenge staff of my sonne, shal bringe downe all wodde. He hath put his swearde to $\stackrel{f}{y}$ dightinge, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ good holde maye be take of it. This swearde is sharpened $\frac{\pi}{\text { dight, }}$ $\frac{\dot{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ it maye be geuen in to the honde of the manslayer.

Crie (o thou some of man) and howle, for this swearde shal smyte my people, ot all the rulers in lsrael, which with my people shall be slayne downe to the grounde thorow this swearde. Smyte thou vpo thy thee, for, wherfore shulde not the plage $₫$ staff of iudgmēt come? Prophecy thou sonne of man, al smyte thine hōdes together: make the swearde two edged, yee make it thre edged, $\frac{\stackrel{t}{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ manslayers swearde, that swearde of the greate slaughter, which shal smyte them, euen in their preuy chambres: to make them abaszshed a faynte at the hertes, $\pi$ in all gates to make some of them fall. O how bright and sharpe is it, how wel dight $\pi$ mete for $\frac{8}{y}$ slaughter? Get the to some place alone, ether vpon the right honde or on the lefte, whither so euer thy face turneth. I wil smyte my hondes together also, and satisfie my wrothfull indignacion: Euen I the LORDE haue sayde it.

The worde of the LORDE came yet vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make the two stretes, that the swearde of $\dot{y}$ kinge of Babilo maye come. Both these stretes shall go out of one londe. He shal set him vp a place, at the heade of the strete shal he chose him out a corner. Make y a strete, that the swearde maye come towarde Rabath of the Ammonites, and to the stronge cite of Ierusalem. For the kinge of Babilon shall stonde in the turnynge of the waye, at the heade of the two stretes: ' to axe councell at the soythsayers, castinge the lottes with his arowes, to axe councell at the Idols, and to loke in the lyuer. But the soythsayenge shall poynte to the right syde vpon lerusalem, that he maye set men of warre, to smyte it with a greate noyse, to crie out Alarum, to set batellrammes agaynst the gates, to graue vp dyches, a to make bulworkes.

Neuertheles, as for $\mathfrak{y}$ soythsayenge, they shall holde it but for vanite, euen as though a iest were tolde them: Yee and they them selues remembre their wickednesse, so that by right they must be take and wonne. Therfore saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as ye youre selues shewe youre offence, and haue opened youre wickednesse, so that in all youre workes men maye se youre synnes: Yee in so moch (l saye) that ye youre selues haue made mencion therof, ye shalbe taken by violence.

O thou shameful wicked gyde of Israel, whose daye is come: euen the tyme that wickednesse shall haue an ende: Thus saieth the LORDE God: take awaye the mytre, and put of the crowne, and so is it awaye : the humble is exalted, and the proude brought lowe. Panysh, punysh, yce punysh them will 1, and destroye them: and that shall not be fulfilled, wintil he come, to whom the iudgment belongeth, and to whom I haue gene it. And thou (o sonne of man) prophecy, a speake: ${ }^{a}$ Thus saieth the LORDE God to the children of Anmon, $\tau$ to their blasphemy, speake thou: The swearde, the swearde, is drawen forth alredy to the slanghter, $\tau$ scoured that it glistreth (because thou hast loked the out vanities, a prophecied lyes) $\frac{y}{y}$ it maye come tpon thy necke, like as voo the other mgodly, which be slayne: whose daye came, when their wickednesse was full.

Though it were put yp agayne in to the sheath, yet will I punysh the, in the londe where thou wast norished a borne, and poure my indignacion rpon the, and will blowe vpon the in the fyre of my wrath, and delyuer the unto cruell people, which are lerned to destroye. Thou shalt fede the fyre, and thy bloude shall be shed in the londe, that thou mayest be put out of remembraunce. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Is thy herte able to endure it, or maye thy hondes defende them selues, in the tyme that I shall bringe ypon the? Euen I the LORDE that speake it, will bringe it also to passe.
$f$ I will scatre the amonge the Heithen, $\pi$ strowe the aboute in the lödes, and wil cause thy fylthynesse to ceasse out off the: yee and I will haue the in possession in the sight of the Heithen, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

And the worde off the LORDE came mnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the house of Israel is turned to drosse.? All they that shulde be brasse, tynne, yrō a leade, are in the fyre become drosse. 'Therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as ye all are turned in to drosse, beholde: İ will brynge you together vito Ierusalem, like as syluer, brasse, yron, tynne and leade are put together in the fornace, and the fyre blowen there vader to melt them: Euen so will I gather you, put you in together, and melt you in my wrath and indignacion. I will brynge you together, and kyndle the fyre of my cruell displeasure vnder you, that ye maye be melted therin.

Like as the syluer is melted in the fyre, so shall ye also be melted therin: that ye maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue poured my wrath vpon you.

And the worde off the LORDE came vato me, sayēge: Thou sonne of mā, tell her: Thou art an vn clene londe, which is not rayned vpon in the daye off the cruell wrath: "thy prophetes that are in the, are sworne

[^706]together to deuoure soules, like as a roaringe Lyon, that lyueth by his pray. They receaue riches and good, and make many wyddowes in $y$. Thy prestes breake my lawe, and defyle my Sanctuary. ${ }^{a}$ They put no dyfference betwene the holy and vnholy, nether discerne betwene the clene and vnclene: they turne their eyes fro my Sabbathes, and I am vnhalowed amonge them.
${ }^{\Delta}$ Thy rulers in the are like rauyshinge wolues, to shed bloude, and to destroye soules, for their owne covetous lucre. As for thy prophetes, they dawbe with rntempered claye, they se vanities, and prophecie lies vnto them, sayenge: the LORDE God sayeth so, where as the LORDE hath not spoken. The people in the londe vseth wicked extorcio and robbery. "They vexe the poore and nedy: and oppresse the straunger agaynst right. And I sought in the londe for a man, that wolde make vp the hedge, and set him self in the gappe before me in the lōdes behalfe, $\stackrel{t}{\mathbf{y}} \mathrm{I}$ shulde not vtterly destroye it: but I coude fynde none. Therfore wil I poure out my cruell displeasure ypon them, and burne them in the fyre of my wrath: their owne wayes will I recompence vpo their heades, saieth the LORDE God.

The miii. Chapter.

THE worde off the LORDE came vato me, sayenge: Thou somne of man, there were two wome, that had one mother: ${ }^{d}$ These (when they were yonge) beganne to playe the harlottes in Egipte. There were their brestes brussed, and the pappes off their maydenheade destroyed. The eldest of them was called Oola, and hir yongest sister Ooliba. These two were myne, and bare sonnes and doughters. Their names were, Samaria, and that was Oola: and Ierusalem, that was Ooliba. As for Oola, she beganne to go a whorynge, when I had take her to me. She was set on fyre upon hir louers the Assirians, which had to do with her: ${ }^{e}$ euen the prynces and lordes, that were deckte in costly araye: fayre yonge men, lusty ryders of horses.

Thus thorow hir whordome, she cleued vnto all the yonge men off Assiria: Yee she was madde vpon them, and defyled herselff with all their Idols. Nether ceassed she frō the fornieacio, that she vsed with the Egipcians: for in hir youth they laye with her, they brussed the brestes of hir maydenheade, and poured their wordome vpon her. 'Wherfore, 1 delyuered her in to $\dot{y}^{\circ}$ hōdes of hir loners, euen the Assirians, whom she so loued. ${ }^{8}$ These discouered hir shame, toke hir sonnes and donghters, and slewe her with the swearde: An euell name gat she of all people, aid they punyshed her.
"Hir sister Ooliba sawe this, ad destroyed herself with inordinate loue, more then she, ? exceaded hir sister in whordome : she loued $\dot{f}$ Assirians (which also laye with her) namely, the prynces a greate lordes, that were clothed with all maner of gorgions apparell, all lusty horsmen and fayre yonge personnes. Then I sawe, that they both were defyled a like. But she increased still in whordome: for when she sawe men paynted vpon the wall, the ymages off the Caldees set forth with fresh colours, with fayre gyrdles aboute them, and goodly bonettes vpon their heades, lokynge all like prynces (after $\dot{y}$ maner of the Babilonias and Caldees in their owne londe, where they be borne) Immediatly, as soone as she sawe them, she brent in loue rpon them, and sent messangers for them in to the londe of the Caldees.

Now when the Babilonias came to her, they laye with her, and defyled her with their whordome, and so was she poluted with them. And when hir lust was abated from them, hir whordome and shame was diseonered a sene: 'then my herte forsoke her, like as my herte was gone from hir sister also. Neuertheles she vsed hir whordome euer the longer the more, and remembred the dayes off hir youth, wherin she had played the harlot in the londe off Egipte: she brent in lust vpon them, whose flesh was like $\dot{y}$ flesh of $A$ sses, ${ }^{4}$ and their sede like the sede off horses. Thus thou hast renued the fylthynesse of thy youth, when thy loners bressed thy pappes, and marred thy brestes in Egipte.

Therfore (o Ooliba) thus saieth ý LORDE God. I will rayse vp thy louers (with whom thou hast satisfied thy lust) agaynst the, and gather them together rounde aboute the: Namely, the Babilonians, and all the Caldees: Pecod, Schoa and Coa, with all the Assirians:

[^707] Naum 3. d. Eze. 16. e. ${ }^{k}$ Eze. 16. c. all yonge and fayre loners: prynces and lordes, knyghtes and gentlemen, which be all good horsmen: These shall come vpon the with horses, charettes, a a greate multitude of people: which shal be harnessed aboute the on enery syde, with brestplates, sheldes and hehnettes. I will punysh $\hat{y}$ before then, yee they the selues shal punysh the, acordinge to their owne iudgmēt. I will put my gelonsy vpon the, so that they shall deale cruelly with the. They shal cut of thy nose and thine eares, and the remuaunt shall fall thorow the swearde. They shall cary awaye thy somes and doughters, a the resydue shalbe brent in the fyre. They shal strype the out of thy clothes, a cary thy costly Iewels awaye with them.

Thus will I make an ende off thy fylthynesse $t$ whordome, which thou hast brought out of the lode of Egipte: so that thou shalt turne thine eyes nomore after them, a cast thy mynde nomore vpon Egipte. For thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I will delyuer $\dot{y}$ in to the hodes of them, whom thou hatest : yee enen in to the hondes of them, with whō thou hast fulfylled thy lust, which shall deale cruelly with $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ : All thy laboure shal they take with them, and leaue the naked and bare, and thus the shame of thy filthy whordome shal come to light. All these thinges shal happen vnto the, because of thy whordome, which thou hast vsed amonge the Gentiles, with whose Idols thou hast defyled thy self. Thou hast walked in the waye of thy sister, therfore will 1 geue the hir cuppe in thy honde.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: Thou shalt drynke off thy sisters cuppe, how depe a farre so euer it be to the botome. Thou shalt be laughed to scorne, and had as greatly in derision, as is possible. Thou shalt be full off dronckennes and sorowe, for the cuppe of thy sister Samaria is a cuppe of destruccion $a$ waistinge: the same shalt thou drynke, and suppe it out eue to $\frac{8}{y}$ dregges, yee thou shalt eate up the broken peces off it, and so teare thine owne brestes: For euen I hame spoken it, saieth the LORDE God.

Therfore thus saieth fi LORDE God: For sto moch as thou hast forgotté me, a east me asyde, so beare now thine owne fylthinesse a whordome. 'The LORDE sayde morouer vinto me: 'Thou some of min, wilt thon not reproue Oola © Ooliba? Shewe thē their abhominaciōs: namely, $\dot{t}^{\mathbf{t}}$ they haue brokē their wedlocke, $\pi$ stayned their hōdes with bloude: yee euen with their Idols haue they committed aduoutry, ${ }^{a}$ a offred them their owne children (to be deuoured) whō they had borne vnto me. ${ }^{\text {b }}$ Yee a this haue they done vnto me also: they haue defyled my Sāctuary in that same daye, a haue vnhalowed my Sabbath. For when they had slayne their childrē for their Idols, they came the same daye in to my Sanctuary, to defyle it. Lo, this have they done in my house. Besyde all this, thou hast sent thy messaungers for men out of farre coutrees: and whe they came, thou hast bathed, trymmed and set forth thy selff off the best fashion: ' thou sattest vpō a goodly bed, a a table spred before the: whervpon thou hast set myne incense and myne oyle.

Then was there greate cheare with her, a the men $\stackrel{t}{y}$ were sent frō farre coūtrees ouer the deserte: wnto these they gaue bracelettes vpon their hondes, a set glorious crownes vpon their heades. Then thought I: no doute, these wil vse their harlotry also with yoder olde whore. And they wente in to her, as vnto a comon harlot: Euen so wente they also to Oola © Ooliba, those filthy women.
${ }^{d} \mathrm{O}$ ye all that loue vertue and rightuousnes, iudge thē, punysh them: as aduoutrers and murtherers ought to be iudged and punyshed. For they are breakers off wedlocke, and the bloude is in their hondes. Wherfore thus saieth the LORDE God: bringe a greate multitude off people vpon them, and make them be seatred and spoyled: these shal stone them, and gorre them with their sweardes. They shal slaye their sonnes and doughters and burne vp their houses with fyre.

Thus will I destroye all soch fylthynes out off the londe: that all women may lerne, not to do after youre vnelenesse. And so they shall laye youre fylthinesse vpon youre owne sehues, and ye shalbe punyshed for the synnes, that ye haue committed with youre Idols: a ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

IN the ix. yeare, in the x . Moneth, the x. daye off the Moneth, eame the worde off the I.ORDE vito me, sayenge: O thou [^708]sonne off man, wryte vp the name off this daye, yee euē $\mathfrak{y}$ houre of this present daye: when the kynge of Babilon set himself agavnst Ierusate. ${ }^{a}$ Shewe y obstinate housholde a parable, © speake vnto the : Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Get the a pot, set it on, a poure water in to it : put all the peces together in it, all the good peces: the loyne and the shulder, $\mathbb{f}$ fyll it with the best bones. Take one off the best shepe, © an heape off bones withall : let it boyle well, $\tau$ let the bones seyth well therin.

With that, sayde the LORDE God on this maner: ${ }^{b}$ Wo be vnto the bloudy cite of $\dot{y}$ pot, wherrpon the rustynesse hāgeth, and is not yet scoured awaye. Take out the peces that are in it, one after another: there nede no lottes be cast therfore, for the bloude is yet in it. Vpon a playne drye stone hath she poured it, and not vpon the grounde, that it might be couered with dust. And therfore haue I letten
$3 her poure hir bloude vpon a playne drye stony rocke, because it shulde not be hid, and that I might bringe my wrothfull indignacion and vengeaunce vpon her.

Wherfore, thus saieth $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE God: O , wo be vnto that bloudthurstie cite, for whō I wil prepare a heape off wodde: beare thou $\dot{y}$ bones together, kyndle thou the fyre, seeth the flesh, let all be well soddē, that the bones maye be suckte out. Morouer, set the pot emptye vpon the coales, that it maye be warme and the metall hote : that the fylth and rustynesse maye be consumed. But it will not go off, there is so moch off it : the rustinesse must be brent out. Thy filthinese is abhominable, for 1 wolde haue clensed the, but thou woldest not be clensed. Thou canst not be pourged from thine vnclennesse, till I haue poured my wrothfull indignacion rpon the. Euen I the LORDE haue so deuysed: Yee it is come therto allredy, that I will do it. I will not go backe, I will not spare, I wil not be intreated: but acordinge to thy wayes ind ymaginacions, thou shalt be punyshed, saieth the LORDE God.
And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, beholde, I will take awaye the pleasure off thine cyes with a plage: yet shalt thou nether mourne ner wepe, ner water thy chekes therfore : thou mayest mourne by thy selff alone, but vse no deadly lamentacion. Holde on thy bonet, [^709]and put on thy shues vpon thy fete, couce not thy face, and eate no mourners bred. So I spake vato the people by tymes in the mornynge, and at euen my wyfe dyed : then ypon the nexte morow, I dyd as I was comaunded. And $\dot{y}$ people sayde vnto me: wilt thou not tell vs, what that signifieth, which thou doest? 1 answered them, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayege: Tell the house of Israel, thus saieth y LORDE God: beholde, I wil suspende my Sanctuary : eue the glory of youre power, the pleasure of youre cyes, and the thinge that ye loue: youre sonnes and doughters whom ye haue left, shal fall thorow the swerde.

Like as I haue done, so shall ye do also: Ye shal not hyde youre faces, ye shal eate no mourners bred : youre bonettes shal ye haue ypon youre heades, $\tau$ slues vpon youre fete. Ye shal nether mourne ner wepe, but in youre symues ye shal be sorouffll, and one repéte with another. Thus Ezechiel is youre shewtokē. For loke as he hath done, so (when this commeth) ye shall do also: that ye maye lerne to knowe, that 1 am $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE God. But beholde, O thou sonne of man: In the daye when I take from them their power, their ioye and honoure, the lust off their eyes, the burthé of their bodies: namely, their sonnes and doughters: The shall there one escape, and come vinto the, for to shewe the. In that daye shal thy month be opened to him, which is escaped, that thou mayest speake, and be nomore domme: Yee and thou shalt be their shewtoke, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Ther rrb . Chapter.

TTHE worde of the LORDE came vato me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst $\dot{y}$ Ammonites, 'prophecy vpon them, and saye vito the Ammonites: Heare the worde off the LORDE God, Thus saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as thou speakest ouer my Sanctuary: A ha, 1 trow it be now suspended: and ouer the londe of Isracl, 1 trow it be now desolate: yee ad ouer the house of Iuda, I trow they be now led awaye presoners: Beholde, I will delyucr $y$ to the people of the east, $\dot{y}$ they maye haue the in possession: these shal set their castels and houses in the. They shall eate thy frute, and drynke vp thy [^710]mylcke. As for Rabath, I wil make of it a stall for camels, and of Ammon a shepefolde: and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

For thus saieth the LORDE God: In so moch as thou hast clapped with thine hondes, and stamped with thy fcte, yee reioysed in thine herte ouer the londe of Israel with despyte: beholde, 1 wil stretch out myne höde ouer the also, and delyuer the, to be spoyled off the Heithen, and rote the out from amonge the people, and cause the be destroyed out
3 off all londes: yee 1 will make the be layed waist, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saieth $\hat{y}$ LORDE God: ${ }^{a}$ For so moch as Moab and Seir do saye: As for the house off litda, it is but like as all other Gētiles be: Therfore beholde, I will make the cities off Moab weapenlesse, and take awaye their strength: their cities and chefe coastes off their londe, which are the pleasures off the countre: As namely. Betiesimoth, Baalmē̄ and Cariathaim: these will I open vato the off the east, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they maye fall vpon the Ammonites: and will geue it them in possession: so that the Ammonites shal no nore be had in remēbraunce amonge the Heithen. Euen thus will I punysh Moab also, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: ${ }^{b}$ Because that Edom hath avenged a eased himself ypon the house off Iuda, therfore thus saieth the LORDE: I will reach out myne honde vpon Edom, and take awaye man and d beest out off it. From Themā vuto Dedan wil I make it desolate, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. Thorow my people of Israel, ${ }^{c}$ wil I avenge me agayne vpō Edō: they shal hadle him, acordinge to my wrath and indignaciō, so that they shal knowe my vengeaunce, saieth the LORDE God.

Thus saieth y LORDE God: ${ }^{d}$ For so moch as the Philistynes haue done this: namely, taken vengeaunce with despitefull stomackes, and off an olde euell will set them selues to destroye: 'Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the Philistynes, and destroye the destroyer, and cause all the remnaunt off the see coast to perish. A greate vengeaunce will [^711]I take vpon them, and punysh them cruelly : that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE, which hane avenged me off them.

IThappened, that in the xi. yeare, the first 2 daye off the Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: ${ }^{e}$ Thou sonne of man, Because that Tyre hath spoken ypon Ierusalem: A ha, now I trow the portes of the people be broken, and she turned vnto me, for I hane destroyed my bely full. Yee therfore saieth $y$ LORDE God: Beholde $O$ Tyre, I will yō the, I wil bringe a greate multitude of people agaynst $\dot{y}$, like as whe the see aryseth with his wawes: These shal breake the walles off Tyre, and cast downe hir towres: I wil scrape the grounde from her, and make her a bare stone: yee as the dryenge place, where the fyshers hange vp their nettes by the see syde. Euen I haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God. The Getiles shal spoyle her: hir doughters vpon the felde shall perish with the swearde, $y^{t}$ they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

For thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I will brynge hither Nabuchodonosor (which is the kynge off Babilon $\tau$ a kynge of kynges) from the North, vo Tyre, with horses, charettes, horsmen and with a greate multitude of people. Thy doughters that are in the londe, shal he slaye with $\dot{y}$ swearde : But agaynst $\dot{y}$, he shall make bullworkes a grane vp dyches aboute the, a lift vp his shylde agaynst $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$. His slynges a batelrāmes shal he prepare for thy walles, of with his weapès breake downe thy towres. The dust of his horses shal couer $\dot{y}$, they shalbe so many: thy walles shal shake at the noyse of $\stackrel{\circ}{i}$ horse men, charettes © wheles: when he coneth to thy portes, as men do in to an open cite. With the hoffes off his horse fete, shal he trearle downe all thy stretes.

He shal slaye thy people with the swearde, $\tau$ breake downe the pilers of thy strength. They shal waist awaye thy riches, a spoyle thy marchañise. Thy walles shal they breake downe, a destroye thy houses of pleasure. Thy stones, thy tymbre $\pi$ foundacions, shall they cast in the water. Thus wil I brynge the melody of thy songes, $f$ the voyce of thy [^712]minstrelsy to an ende, so that they shal nomore be herds. I will make a bare stone off, the, yee a dryenge place for notes, and shalt neuer be buylded agayne: For cue 1 ff LORDE have spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God: thus hath the LORDE God spoken concernynge Tyre: The lies shall be moved at the noyse off thy fall, at at the erie of the slayne, $\frac{\dot{y}}{}$ shat be murthured in the. All kynges off the see shall come down from their sates regall: they shall lave away their roabes, and put off their costly clothing: Fee with tremblinge shat they be clothed, they shall syn vo the grounde : they shal be afrayed at thy sodane fall, and be abasshed at the.

They shat mourne for the, and save vito the : O thou noble cite, $\frac{t}{y}$ hast mene so greatly occupyed off olde, "thou that hast bee the strongest upon the see with thine inhabitours off whom all men store in fare: How art thou now so vtterly destroyed? Now at the tyme off thy fall the inhabitours off the Ills, yee and the lies them selves shall stonde in 2 fare at thine ende. For thus sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the a desolate cite (as other cities be, that no man dwell in) and when I brynge the dope soon the, $\underset{y}{y}$ grate waters mage couer the: Then will I cast the downe vito them, that descend in to $\dot{y}$ byte: vito a people that hath bens loge deed, and set the in a lond $\frac{t}{y}$ is beneth, like the olde wyldernes, with them which go downe to their graves, so $\frac{t}{y}$ no man shal dwell more in the. And I wi make the to be no more in honoure, in the lode of the lyuynge. I wil make an ende off the, add thou shalt be gone. Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou not be found for euermore, saieth y LORDE God.

a ${ }^{1}$ HE words off the LORDE came vito me, sayenge: $O$ thou sine off max, make a lamentable cōplaynte ron Tyre, $\pi$ says vito Tyre, which is a porte off the see, $\dot{y}$ occupieth with mosh people: ${ }^{b}$ and many les: thus speaketh y LORDE God: O Tyre thou hast sayde: what, I am a noble cite, thy borders are in the myddest of the see, and thy buylders have made the maruelons goodly. All thy tables have they made of Cipre trees of the mount Senir. Fro Libanus have they take Cedre trees, to make the master: the Oks of Basan to make the rowers.

Thy boordes have they made of yuery, i of costly wood out of the le of Cethim. Thy sale was of whyte small nedle work out off the longe of Egipte, to häge vo thy mast: is thy hanginges of yalow sylcke I purple, out of y Ales of Elisa. They of Sidon a Arnad were thy maryners, a the wisest in Tyre were thy shypmasters. The eldest and wysest at Gebal were they, that mended it stopped thy shapes.

All shippers off the see with their shipme occupied their marchaundies in the. The Parses, Lydians and Lybians were in thyme hoost, and helped the to fight: these hanged vp their shildes a helmettes with the, these set forth thy beauty.

They off A nad were with thine hoost round about thy walles, were thy watchmen upon thy towres: these hanged vp their shildes route aboute thy walles, and made the marvelous goodly. Tharsis occupied with the in all mane of wares, in syluer, gyron, tyne and lead, and made thy market greats. Iauan, Tubal and Mesech were thy marchauntes, which brought the men, ornamentes off meal for thy occupyenge. They off the house of Thogarma brought vito the at the tyme off thy Mate, horse, horsmen and mules. "They off Dedan were thy marchaūtes: and many other lies that occupyed with the, brought the wethers, elephant bones and Paycocks for a present. 'The Sirians occupied with the, because of thy dyucrse workers, and increased thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with scarlet, with nedle worke, with white lyminge cloth, with sylcke and with Christall.

Luda and the londe off Israel occupide with the, and brought vito thy markettes, wheate, bahme, bony, ogle, it triacle. Damascus also used marchandies with the, in the best wye and white woll: because thy occupienge was so greate, and thy wares so many. Dan, lauan, and Meusal have brought vito thy markettes, yon redy made, with Casia and Calamus, acordinge to thyme occupienge. Dedan occupied with the, in fayre tapestry work and quyszhyns. Arabia đ all the princes off Cedar have occupied with the, in shepe, wethers and grates.

The marchauntes off Seba and Rema have occupied also with the, in all costly spices, in [^713]all precious stones and golde, which they brought vuto thy marckettes. Haran, Chene and Eden, the marchauntes off Saba, Assiria and Chelmad, were all doers with $\hat{y}$ and occupied with the: In costly rayment, off yalow sylke and nedle worke, (very precious, a therfore packte a boude together with roapes) Yce and in Cedre wodde, at the tyme off thy marckettes. The shippes of Tharsis were the chefe off thy occupienge.

Thus thou art full, and in greate worshipe, euen in the myddest off the see. Thy maryners were ener brynginge vato the out of many waters. But $\hat{y}$ easte wyde shal ouerbeare the in to the myddest off the see : so $\frac{t}{y}$ thy wares, thy marchaudies, thy ryches, thy maryners, thy shipmasters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges necessary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comons shall perish in the myddest off the see, in the daye off thy fall. The suburbes shall shake at the loude crie off thy shippmen. All whirry men, and all maryners ypo the sec, shall leape out of their boates, and set them selues rpon the lōde. They shal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They shall cast dust vpon their heades, àd lye downe in the asshes. They shal shaue them selues, a put sacke cloth vpon them for thy sake.

They shall mourne for the with hertfull sorow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children also shall wepe for the: Alas, what cite hath so bene destroyed in the see, as Tyre is? When thy wares $\mathbb{C}$ marchaundies came fro the sees, thou gauest all people ynough. The kynges off the earth hast thou made rich, thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupienge: But now art thou cast downe in to the depe of the see, all thy resorte of people is perished with the. All they that dwell in the Iles are abasshed at the, and all their kynges are afrayed, yee their faces haue chaunged coloure. The marchauntes of the nacions wondre at the, In that thou art so clene brought to naught, a comest nomore vp .

Dye shalt thou, euen as the vncircumcised in the hōdes of $\hat{y}$ enemies: for 1 myself haue spoken it, saieth the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde off the LORDE came vato me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, make a lamentable complaynte ouer the kynge of Tyre, $\pi$ tell him: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Thou art a seate of a licknesse, full off wyszdome t excellent beuty. Thou hast bene in ${ }^{\circ}$ pleasaūt gardē off God: thou art decte with all maner of precious stones: with Ruby, Topas, Christall, Iacyncte, Onyx, Iaspis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbūcle, a golde. Thy beuty a $\dot{y}$ holes $\dot{f}$ be in $\frac{8}{y}$ were set forth in the daye of thy creacion. Thou art a fayre Cherub, stretched wyde ont for to coner.

I have set the vpon the holy mount off God, there hast thou bene, and walked amoge the fayre glisteringe stones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou hast bene right excellent, tyll wickednesse was founde in the. ${ }^{d}$ Because off thy greate marchaundise, thy hert is full of wickeduesse, $t$ thou hast offended. Therfore wil I cast the from the mount of God, (O thou coueringe Cherub) and destroye the amoge the glisteringe stones. Thy hert was proude in thy fayre beuty, $九$ thorow thy beuty thou hast destroyed thy wiszdome. I will [^714]cast $\dot{y}$ downe to the grounde, a $\hat{y}$ in $\hat{y}$ sight of kynges. Thou hast defyled thy Säctuary, with the greate wickednesse off thy onrightuous occupyenge. I wil bringe a fyre from the myddest of the, to consume the: ad wil make the to asshes, in the sight of all the $\dot{y}$ loke vpon the. All they that hane bene acquaunted with the amonge the Heithé, shal be abasshed at the: seinge thou art so elene brought to naught, and cömest no more vp.

And the worde off the LORDE came vito me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst Sidō, Prophecie vpō it, and speake. ${ }^{a}$ Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpō the, get me honoure in the: that it maye be knowne, how that I am y LORDE, when I punysh her, $\tau$ get me honoure in her. For 1 will sende pestilence ๕ bloud sheddinge in to hir stretes, so $\dot{y}$ those which be slayne with the swerde, shal lye rounde aboute in the myddest of her: $\tau$ they shal knowe, that 1 am the LORDE. She shal no more be a prickinge thorne, $\mathbb{\pi}$ an hurtinge brere vnto the house of Jsrael, ner vito the that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: when I gather the housholde of Israel together agayne, from the nacions amonge whon they be seatred: then shal 1 be sanctified in thē, in $\dot{y}$ sight of the Gétiles : © they shal dwell in the löde, $\dot{y}$ I gaue to my seruatunt lacob. They shal dwell safely therin, ${ }^{\circ}$ buylde houses, and plante vynyardes: Yee safely shal they dwell therin, when I haue punyshed all those, that despyse them rounde aboute: and then shall they knowe, $\frac{y}{y}$ I am the LORDE their God.

1 wil cast the out vpon the dry lơde with the fish of thy waters, so that thou shalt lye ypon the felde. Thou shalt not be gathered ner taken vp, but shalt be meate for the beestes of the felde, a for the foules off the ayre: that all they which dwell in Egipte, maye knowe, that 1 am the LORDE: because thou hast bene a staff of rede to the house of Israel. ${ }^{d}$ When they toke holde of $\dot{y}$ with their hōde thou brakest and prycdest them on euery syde: and yff they leaned vpo the, thou brakest, ad hurtdest the reynes of their backes. MOROUER, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophecy o speake : thus saieth the LORDE God: ${ }^{a}$ Mourne, wo worth this daye, for the daye is here, the daye of $\frac{1}{}$ LORDE is come: the dareke daye of $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ Heithe, the houre is at honde, the swearde commeth vpon Egipte. When the wounded men fall downe in Egipte, when hir people are taken awaye, and when hir foundaciōs are destroyed: the Morians londe shal be afrayed, yee the Morians londe, Lybia a Lydia, all their comon people, a Chub, a all $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ be confederate vato thé, shal fall with the thorow ${ }^{\circ}$ swearde.

Thus saieth f LORDE: The maynteyners of the lode of Egipte shal fall, the pryde of hir power shal come downe: eue vito the tower off Syenes shall they be slayne downe with the swearde, saieth $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ LORDE God: amonge other desolate countrees they shal be made desolate, $九$ amoge other waist cities they shalbe waisted. And they shal knowe, $\frac{t}{y}$ I am y LORDE, when I kyndle a fyre in Egipte, t when all hir helpers are destroyed.

At that tyme, shal there messaungers go forth fro me in shippes, to make y carelesse Morians afrayed: and sorowe shal come upon them in the daye of Egipte, for doutles it shal come. Thus saieth the LORDE God: 1 wil make an ende of the people of Egipte thorow the honde of Nabuehodonosor kynge of Babilon. He and his people with him, yee and the cruell tyrauntes of the Heithen shalbe brought to destroye the londe. They shal drawe out their sweardes vpon Egipte and fyll the londe full of slayne men. I will drye ip their floudes of water, ād sell the löde in to the hondes of wieked people. The lode and all $\frac{\tau}{y}$ is therin, wil I destroye thorow the enemies. Euē $l$ the LORDE haue sayde it.

And thus saieth the LORDE God: I will destroye the ldols, and brynge the ymages of Noph to an ende. ${ }^{\text {bI }}$ There shal nomore be a prynce of Egypte, and a fearfulnesse will I sende in to the Egipcians londe. As for Pathures, I wil make it desolate, ād kyndle a fyre in Zoan. Alexandria will I punysh, a poure my wrothfull indignaciō rpo $\overline{\operatorname{Sin}}$, which is the strength of Egipte. All the sustaunce of Alexandria will 1 destroye, and kyndle a fyre in Egipte.

Sin shalbe in greate heuynesse, Alexandria shalbe roted out, and Noph shall haue daylie sorowe. The best men off Heliopolis a Bubasto shalbe slayne with the swearde, àd caried awaye captyue. At Taphnis the daye shalbe darcke, when I breake there the scepter of the londe of Egipte, and when y pompe of hir power shal haue an ende. A cloude shal couer her, and hir doughters shalbe led awaye in to captyuyte. Thus will I punysh Egipte, that they mase knowe, how that I an the LORDE.

It lappened in the xi. yeare, vpon the seuēth daye of $\mathfrak{y}$ first Moneth, ${ }^{\circ}$ the LORDES worde came vito me, sayege: Beholde, thou sonne of mã, I wil breake $\mathfrak{y}$ arme of Pharao kynge of Egipte: and lo, it shal not be boüde ip to be healed, nether shal eny playstre be layed vpon it, for to ease it, or to make it so stroge, as to holde a swearde. Therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: beholde, I will vpon Pharao y kinge of Egipte, a brusse his strōge arme (yet is it but a broken one) a will smyte the swearde out of his honde.

As for the Egipeians, I wil scatre them amonge the Heithen, a strowe the in the londes aboute. Agayne I wil strength forme of the kinge of Babilo, a geue him my swearde in his höde: but I wil breake Pharaos arme, so $\frac{t}{y}$ he shal holde it before him piteously, like a wounded man.

Yee I will stablish the kynge of Babilos arme, ot the armes of Pharao shal fall downe: that it maye be knowne, that 1 am the LORDE, which geue the kynge off Babilon my swearde in his hōde, that he maye drawe it out rpon the londe of Egipte: and that when I scatre the Egipcians amonge the Gentiles, and strowe them in $\hat{y}$ lodes aboute, they maye knowe, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ I am the LORDE.

MOROUER, it happened in the xi. yeare $\mathfrak{y}$ first daye of the thirde Moneth, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: ${ }^{a}$ Thou sonne of man, speake vnto Pharao the kynge of Egipte, ād to all his people: Whom art thou like in thy greatnesse? Beholde, Assur was like a Cedre tre vpō the mount of Libanus, with fayre brañches: so thicke, that he gaue shadowes, and shot out very hye. His toppe reached vnto the cloudes. The waters made him greate, and the depe set him vp an hye. Roūde aboute the rotes of him räne there floudes of water, he sent out his litle ryuers vnto all the trees of the felde. Therfore was he hyer thē all the trees of the felde, and thorow y multitude of waters that he sent frō him, he optayned many and longe braunches. All foules of the ayre made their nestes in his braüches, vnder his bowes gedred all the beastes of $\dot{y}$ felde, $\mathfrak{z}$ vnder his shadow dwelt all people. Fayre and beutifull was he in his greatnesse, and in the length of his braunches, for his rote stode besyde greate waters: no Cedre tre might hyde him. In the pleasaūt garden of God, there was no Fyrre tre like his braüches, the playne trees were not like $\dot{y}$ bowes of him. All the trees in the garden off God might not be cōpared vnto him in his beuty: so fayre and goodly had I made him with the multitude of his braunches: In so moch, $\dot{y}$ all the trees in the pleasaūt gardē of God, had envye at hi.
5 Therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as he hath lift vp himself so hie, a stretched his toppe in to the cloudes, a seinge his hert is proude in his highnesse: I wil delyuer him in to ẙ hondes of y mightiest amoge $\dot{y}$ Heithē, which shall rote him out. Acordige to his wickednes will I cast him awaye, the enemies shal destroye him, at the mighty men of the Heithen shall so seatre

[^717]|him, that his braunches shal lye vpon all mountaynes d in all valleys: his bowes shall be broken downe to the grounde thorow out the londe. Then all the people of the londe shal go from his shadowe, and forsake him. When he is fallē, all $\hat{y}$ foules of $\mathfrak{y}$ ayre shal syt upon him, and all wilde beestes of the felde shal go aboute amonge his brañches : so that from hence forth, no tre in the water shall attayne to his hyenesse, nor reach his toppe vnto the cloudes, nether shall eny tre off the water stonde so hye, as he hath done. For vnto death shall they all be delyuered vnder the earth, and go downe to y graue, like other men.

Morouer, thus saieth the LORDE God: In the daye when he goeth downe to the graue, I wil cause a lamentacion to be made. I will couer the depe vpon him, I will staunch his floudes, and the greate waters shalbe restrayned. I shall calse Libanus to be soroufull for his sake, and all the trees off the felde shall be smytté. I wil make the Heithen shake at the sounde of his fall, ${ }^{b}$ when I cast him downe to hell, with them $\dot{y}$ descende in to the pytte. All the trees of Eden, with all the elosen and best trees of Libanss, yee and all they that are planted ypon the waters, shal morrne with him also in the lower habitacios: for they shal go downe to hell with him, vito thē that be slayne with the swearde, which dwelt afore vnder the shadow off his arme amöge the Heithé. To whom shalt thou be lickened, that art so glorious t greate, amonge the trees off Eden? Yet art thou cast downe under $\hat{y}$ earth (amonge the trees off Eden) where thou must lye amonge the vncircumcised, with them that be slayne with the swearde. Euen thus is it with Pharao a all his people, saieth the LORDE God.

IN the xij. yeare, the first daye of the xij. Noneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take vp a lamentacion vpo Pharao the kynge of Egipte, a saye vnto him: 'Thou art reputed as a Lyon of the Heithen, © as a whalfish in the see. Thou castest thy waters aboute the, thou troublest the waters with thy fete, and stampest in their floudes. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: ${ }^{d}$ I wil sprede my net ouer $\mathfrak{y}$, [^718]namely, a greate multiturle of people: these shal dryue the in to my yarne, for I will cast the rpo the lode, and let the lye vpo the felde, that all the foules of the ayre maye syt yo the: I wil geue all the beastes of the felde ynough off the. Thy flesh will I cast vpo the hilles, and fyll the valleys with thy hyenesse. I will water the londe with the abundaunce off thy bloule enen to the mountaynes, a $\mathfrak{y}$ valleys shal be full off the.

${ }^{-}$When thou art put out, I will couer the heauen, and make his starres dymme. I will sprede a cloude ouer the Sonne, àd the Moone
2 shall not geue lir light. All the lightes off heauen will I put out ouer the, and bringe |darcknesse spon thy londe, saieth 8 LORDE God. I wil trouble the hertes off many people, when 1 bringe thy destruccion amoge the Heithen and countrees, whom thou knowest not. Yee I will make many people with their kynges so afrayed thorow $\dot{f}$, that their hayre shal stonde up, whe I shake my swearde at their faces. Sodenly shal they be astonnyed, euery man in him self, at $y$ daye of thy fall.

For thus saieth the LORDE God: the kynge of Babilons swearde shal come vpon $\dot{y}$, with $y$ sweardes of the worthies will I smyte downe thy people. All they that be mightie amonge the Gettiles, shal waist the proude pompe of Egipte, and brynge downe all hir people. All the catell also of Egipte wil I destroye, that they shal come nomore vpo the waters: so that nether mās fote ner beastes clawe, shal stere them eny more. 'Then wil I make their waters cleare, and cause their floudes to rumne like oyle, sayeth the LORDE Gord: when I make the londe of Egipte desolate, and when $\hat{y}$ countre with all that is therin, shalbe layde waist: and whe I smyte all the which dwell in it, that they maye knowe, that I am the LORDE. This is the mournynge, that the doughters off the Heithen shall make: Yee a sorow and lamentacios shal they take vp, vpon Egipte and all hir people, saieth the LORDE God.

In the xij. yeare, the xy. daye of the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man. Take up a lamentacion vpon the people of Egipte, and cast them downe, yee ad the mightie people of the Heithe also, ${ }^{6}$ euen with the that dwell beneth: and with them that go downe in to the graue. Downe (how fayre so euer thou be) and laye the with the vncircumcised. Amoge those that be slayne with the swearde, shal they lye. The swearde is geuen alredy, he shal be drawen forth and all his people. The mightie worthies and his helpers, $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ be gone downe and lye with the vncircuncised and with them that be slayne with $y$ swearde: shal speake to him out of the hell.

Assur is there also with his company, $\bar{a} d$ their graues rounde aboute, which were slayne $\bar{a} d$ fell all with the swearde, whose graues lye besyde him in the lowe pytte. His comōs are buried rounde aboute his grave: alltogether wounded and slayne with the swearde, which men afore tyme brought feare in to $\hat{y}$ londe off the lyuynge.
"There is Elam also with all his people, and their graues rounde aboute: which all beynge wounded and slayne with the swearde, are gone downe vncircumeised vnder the earth, which neuertheles somtyme brought feare in to the londe off the lyuynge: for the which they beare their shame, with the other that be gone downe to y graue.

Their buryall is geuen them and all their people, amonge them that be slayne. Their graues are rounde aboute all them, which be vncircumcised, and with them that be slayne thorow the swearde: for seynge that in tymes past they made the londe off the lyuynge afrayed, they must now beare their owne shame, with them that go downe to the pytte, and lye amonge them, that be slayne.

There is Mesech also and Tubal, and their people, and their graues rounde aboute. These all are amonge the vncircūcised, and them that be slayne with the swearde, because afore tyme they made the londe off the lyuynge afrayed.

Shulde not they then lye also amonge $\dot{y}$ worthies, and vncircumcised Giauntes? which with their weapens are gone downe to hel: whose sweardes are layed vnder their heades, whose wickednesse is vpon their bones: because that as worthies, they haue brought feare in to $\dot{y}$ lōde of $\dot{y}$ lyuinge? Yee amōge the vneircucised shalt thou be destroyed, and slepe with them, that perished thorow the swearde.

There is the lode off Edom with hir kynges and prynces also, ${ }^{d}$ which with their strēgth are layed by them that were slayne with the swearde, yee amonge the vncircumeised, and them which are gone downe in to the pytte. Morouer, there be all the prynces of the north, with all the Sidoniās, which are gone downe to the slayne.

With their feare and strength they are come to confucion, and lye there vacircumcised, amonge those that be slayne with the swearde: and beare their owne shame, with them that be gone downe to ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{g}}$ pytte. Now when Pharao seyth this, he shal be comforted ouer all his people, that is slayne with the swearde: both Pharao $a$ all his hoost, saieth y LORDE God. For I haue genē my feare in the lode of the lyuynge. But Pharao t all his people shal lye amoge the vncircumcised, and amonge them that be slayne with the swearde, saieth the LORDE God.

AGAYNE, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou some off man, Speake to the childre of thy people, and tell them: When I sende a swearde vpon a londe, yf the people off the londe take a man off their countre, and set him to be their watchman: " y same man (whā he seyth the swearde come vpon the londe) shall blowe the trompet, and warne the people.

Iff a man now heare the noyse off the trompet a will not be warned, and the swearde come ad take him awaye: his bloude shall be ypō his owne heade: For he herde the sounde of the trompet, and wolde not take hede, therfore his bloude be vpon him. But yff he will receaue warnynge, he shal saue his life. Agayne, yf the watch man se the swerde come, and shewe it not with the trompet, so $\dot{y}$ the people is not warned: yff the swearde come then, and take eny man from amoge the : the same shall be taken awaye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre oft the watchmans honde.
3 And now (O thou some of man) I hane made the a watchman ${ }^{6}$ vnto the house of Israel : that where as thou hearest eny thinge out of my mouth, thou mayest warne them on my behalfe. Iff I saye vnto the wicked; thou wicked, thou shalt surely dye: and thou geuest him not warnynge, that he maye bewarre off his vngodly waye: then shall the wicked dye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre of thy honde. Nenertheles yf thou warne the wicked off his waye, to turne from it, where as he yet wil not be turned from it: then shal he dye becanse off his synne, but thou hast delyuered thy soute.

Therfore ( $O$ thou sonne off man) speake vnto the house off Isracl, Ye saye thus: Oure offences and symes lye vpon vs, and we be corrupte in them: how shulde we then be restored voto life? Tell them: As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE God) I haue no pleasure in the death off the wicked, ${ }^{\text {c }}$ but moch rather that the wieked turne from his waye and lyue. Turne you, turne you from youre vngodly wayes, o ye off the house off Israet. Oh, wherfore will ye dye?

Thou sonne off man, tell the children off thy people: ${ }^{d}$ The rightuousnes of the righthous shall not saue him, whan so euer he turneth awaye mfaithfully: Agayne, the wickeduesse of the wieked shal not hurte him, whan so euer he conuerteth from his vngodlynesse :

And $\frac{8}{9}$ rightnousnesse of the rightuous shal not saue his life, when so euer he synneth. Yff I saye vuto the rightuous, that he shall surely lyue, and so he trust to his owne rightuousnesse, and do syme: then shall his rightuousnesse be nomore thought vpon, but in the wickednesse that he hath done, he shall dye.

Agayne, yff I saye to the wickerl: ' thou shalt surely dye: and so he turne frō his symnes, and do the thinge that is laufull and right: In so moch that the same wicked mā geueth the pledge agayne, restoreth that he had taken awaye by robbery, watketh in the cōmaundementes off life, and doth no wrōge :

Then shall he surely lyue, and not dye. Yee the symnes that he had done, shal never be thought ypon: For in so moch as he doth now the thynge that is laufull and right, he shall lyue. And yet the children off thy people saye: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not right, where as their owne waye is rather voright.

When the rightuous turneth from his rightuonsnesse, and doeth the thynge that is wicked, he shall dye therfore. But yf the wicked turne from his wickeduesse, doinge the thinge that is laufull and right, he shall lyue therfore. ${ }^{f}$ Yet ye saye: the waye of $\dot{y}$ e Esa. 55. b. Iere. 18. a. f Eze. 18. f. Ro. 2. a.

LORDE is not equall. O se honse of lsrael, 1 wil iudge euery one of you after his wayes.

In the xij. yeare, the $v$. daye of the $x$. Moneth of oure captyuyte, it happened, that one which was fled out of lerusalem, came whto me, and sayde: $\dot{y}$ cite is destroyed. Now the honde of the LORDE had bene ypon me the euenynge, afore this man (which was escaped) came vito me, and had opened my mouth, sutyll the mornynge that he came to me: Yee he opened my mouth, so $\frac{t}{y}$ I was nomore domme. Then came the worde of $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE vito me, and sayde: Thou some off man, these that dwell in the waisted londe of Israel, sage: Abraham was but one man, ad he had the londe in possessio: now are we many, and the londe is geuen vs to possesse also. And therfore tell them: Thus saieth 玉 the LORDE: In the bloude haue ye eaten, youre eyes have ye lift vp to Idols, ${ }^{a}$ and haue shed bloude: shal ye then hane the londe in possession?

Ye leane ypon youre sweardes, ye worke abhominacions, euery one defyleth his neghbours wife: and shal ye then possesse the londe? Saye thou these wordes vnto the : Thus saieth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, all ye that dwell in this wildernesse, shall be slayne with the swearde: what so is ypon the felde, will I geue vnto the beestes to be deuoured: those that be in stronge holdes and dennes, shall dye off the pestilece. For I wil make the londe desolate and waist, and if pope off hir strength shall come to an ende. The mountaynes in Israel shal be so waiste that no man shall trauayle therby.
${ }^{b}$ Then shall they lerne to knowe, that 1 am the LORDE, whē I make the lōde waist and desolate, because off all their abhominacions, that they haue wrought. And thou somne off man, the children off thy people ${ }^{t}$ talke of the, by the walles id in the dores of their houses, sayenge one to another: come, let rs heare, what worde is gone forth from the LORDE: These come vito the, after $\underset{y}{f}$ maner of a greate people : yee my people syt downe before the, and heare thy wordes, but they do not therafter: ${ }^{c}$ For in their mouthes they shewe them selues, as though they were ferient, but their herte goeth after their owne couetous luere. And as a balet $\stackrel{t}{y}$ hath a [^719]swete tune, àd is pleasaūt to synge, so shalt thou be vnto them: thy wordes shal they heare, but they will not do therafter. Whe this commeth to passe (for lo, it cometh in dede) then shal they knowe, that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

AND the worde off the LORDE came snto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off mā, prophecye agaynst the shepherdes of Israel, prophecy, and speake vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Wo be vato the shepherdes off Israel, ${ }^{d}$ that fede them selues. Shulde not the shepherdes fede $\frac{\circ}{y}$ flockes?

Yc haue eaten rp the fatte, ye haue clothed you with the woll: the best fedde haue ye slayne, but y flocke haue ye not norished: ${ }^{\text {e }}$ The weake haue ye not holden yp , the sicke haue ye not healed: the broken haue ye not bounde together, the outcastes haue ye not brought agayne: ${ }^{f j}$ lost haue ye not sought, but churlishly and cruelly have ye ruled thē. Thus are they scatred here and there without a shepherde: yee all the beastes off the felde denoure them, and they go astraye.

My shepe go wandringe vpon all moūtaynes and ypon euery hye hill, yee they be scatred abrode in all feldes, and there is no man, that careth for them, or seketh after them.

Therfore o ye shepherdes, heare the worde off the LORDE, Thus sayeth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, for so moch as my shepe are robbed, and denoured off all the wylde beestes off the felde, hauynge no shepherde: and seynge that my shepherdes take no regarde off my shepe, but fede them selues only, and not my shepe: Therfore heare $\dot{y}$ worde off the LORDE, o ye shepherdes: Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Beholde, I $m y$ selff will ypon the shepherdes, and requyre my shepe from their hondes, and make the ceasse from fedynge of $m y$ shepe: yee the shepherdes shall fede them selues nomore: For 1 will delyuer my shepe out off their mouthes so that they shall not deuoure them after this.

For thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, ${ }^{5}$ I will loke to my shepe myselff, and seke them. Like as a shepherde amoge the flocke seketh after the shepe that are scatred abrode, euen so will I seke after my shepe, and gather them together out off all places, where they haue bene seatred in the cloudy and dareke daye. I will bringe them out from all people, and gather them together out of all londes. I will bringe the in to their owne londe, and fede them vpon the mountaynes off Israel, by the ryuers, and in all the places of the countre. 1 will fede them in right good pastures, and vpon the hie mountaynes off Israel shall their foldes be. 'There shal they lye in a good folde, $\bar{a} d$ in a fat pasture shall they fede : euen vpon the mountaynes of Israel.

I will fede my shepe myselff, and bringe them to their rest, sayeth the LORDE God. Soch as be lost, will I seke: ${ }^{\text {a }}$ soch as go astraye, wil I brynge agayne: soch as be woùded, will I bynde vp: soch as be weake, will I make stronge : soch as be fat and well lykinge, those will 1 preserue, and fede them with $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ thinge that is laufull. And as for you (o my shepe) sayeth the LORDE God: 1 will put a difference amonge the shepe, ${ }^{6}$ amonge the wethers $\bar{d} d$ the goates. Was it not ynough for you, to eat vp the good pasture, but ye must treade downe the residue of youre pasture with youre fete also? Was it not ynough for you to drynke cleare water, but ye must trouble the residue also with youre fete?

Thus my shepe must be fayne to eate $y$ thinge, that ye haue troden downe with youre lete, and to drynke it, that ye with youre fete haue defyled.

Therfore, thus sayeth the LORDE God vnto them: Beholde, I will seuer the fat shepe from the leane: for so moch as ye haue shot the weake shepe $a p \overline{\bar{y}} \hat{\mathrm{y}}$ sydes $\boldsymbol{x}$ shulders, and runne vpon them with youre hornes, so longe till ye have vtterly seatred them abrode. I wil helpe my shepe, so $\frac{t}{y}$ they shal nomore be spoyled: yee I wil discerne one shepe from - another. I wil rayse rp vnto them one only shepherde: ${ }^{c}$ euen my seruaunt Dauid, he shal fede the, and he shal be their shepherde. I the LORDE wil be their God, and my ser-uaunt Dauid shal be their prince: Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Morouer, I wil make a couenaunt of peace with them, and dryue all euell beastes out of the londe: so that they maye dwell safely in the wildernesse, and slepe in the woddes.

[^720]Good fortune a prosperite wil l geue them, and unto all that be romnde aboute my hill. ${ }^{d}$ A prosperous shower and rayne wil I sende them in due season, that the trees in the wodde maye bringe forth their frutes, © $\dot{y}$ grounde hir increase. They shabe safe in their londe, and shal knowe, that 1 am the LORDE, which haue broke their yocke, and delynered them out of the hondes of those, that helde them in subieccion.

Theyshal nomore be spoyled of the Heithen, ner deuoured with the beastes of the lōde: but safely shal they dwell, a no man shall fraye them. I wil set vp an excellet plate for them, so $\frac{t}{y}$ they shal suffre no more hunger in the londe, nether beare the reprofe of $\hat{y}$ Heithen eny more. Thus shal they vnderstonde, that 1 the LORDE their God am with them, a $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ they (euen the house of lsrael) are my people, saieth the LORDE God. ,THOU sonne of man, prophecie vpon the mountaynes of Israel, a speake: Heare the worde of the LORDE, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Because youre enemie hath sayde vpon you: A ha, $\dot{y}$ hie euerlastynge places are now become ours: prophecy therfore, © speake: thus saieth y LORDE God: Seinge ye be waisted © trodè downe on euery syde, a become a possession vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ resydue of $\mathfrak{y}$ Gētiles, which haue brought you in to més mouthes a vnto an euel name amonge $\dot{y}$ people: Therfore, heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God vnto the mountaynes and hilles, valleys a dales, to the voyde wildernesses © desolate cities, which are spoyled, and had in derision on euery syde, amonge the resydue of the Heithē: Yee euē thus saieth the LORDE God: In the fyre of my gelousy hauc 1 taken a deuyce, agaynst the resydue of the Gētiles, and agaynst all Edom: which haue také in my lode vato the selues for a possession: which also reioysed fro their whole herte with a dexpiteful stomacke, to waist it, and to spoyle it.

[^722]Prophecy therfore vpon the londe of Israel, speake vnto $y$ y mountaynes and hilles, to valleys and dales, thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, this haue I deuysed in my gelousy and terrible wrath: For so moch as ye have suffred reprofe of the Heithen, therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: I haue sworne, that the Gentiles which lye aboute you, shal beare youre confucion them selues. And as for you (o mountaynes of Israel) ye shall shute out youre brauuches, and bringe forth youre frute to my people of Israel, for it is harde by, that it wil come.

Beholde, I come vnto you, and vnto you will I turne me, that ye naye be tylled and sowen. I wil sende you moch people, which shalbe all of the house of Israel: the cities shalbe inhabited, and $\mathfrak{y}$ decayed places shalbe repayred againe. I wil prouyde you with moch people and catell, which shal increase $\mathbb{}$ ( bringe frute. I wil restore you also to youre olde estate, and shewe you more kindnes the euer ye had before: wherby ye shal knowe, $\dot{y}$ I am the LORDE. Yee people wil I sende vnto you (o my folke of Israel) which shal haue the in possession, and thou shalt be their inheritaunce, so that thou shalt nomore be without them. Agayne, thus saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as they saye vnto you: thou art an eater vp of men, and a waister of thy people: therfore thou shalt eate no mo men, nether destroye thy people eny more, saieth the LORDE God. And I wil not suffre the, for to heare thine owne confucion amonge the Gentiles from hensforth. Thou shalt not beare the reprofe of the nacions, ner cast out thine owne people enymore, saieth the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came into me, sayenge: $O$ thou sonne of max, when the house of lsrael dwelt upon their owne grounde, they defyled them selues with their owne wayes a ymaginacions: so that in my sight their waye was like the vnclemesse of a menstruous woman. Wherfore I poured my wrothfull displeasure vpon them, because of the bloude that they had shed in the londe, a because of their Idols, wherwith they had defyled them selues. Then spared I my holy name, which $\hat{y}$ house of Israel had dishonoured amonge the Gentiles, to whom they came. Therfore tell y house of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God: I do not this for youre sakes ( O house of Israel) but for my holy names sake, which ye dishonoured amoge the Heithen, when ye came to them. Therfore, I wil halowe my greate name agayne, which amonge the Getiles is euel spoken of: for ye youre selues haue dishonoured it amoge them. And the Gentiles shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I am honoured in you before their eyes, saieth y LORDE God.

As for you, I wil take you from amonge the Heithen, and gather you together out of all countrees, and bringe you agayne in to youre owne londe. ${ }^{\text {b }}$ Then will I poure cleare water vpon you, o ye shalbe clene: Yee from all youre vnclennesse and from all youre Idols shal I clense you. Then shal ye remēbre youre owne wicked wayes, and youre ymaginaciōs, which were not good: so that ye shal take displeasure at youre owne selues, by reason of youre synnes and abhominacions.

But I wil not do this for youre sakes (saieth the LORDE God) be ye sure of it. Therfore (o ye house of Israel) be ashamed of youre synnes. Morouer, thus saieth the LORDE God: what tyme as I shal clēse you from all youre offences, then wil I make the cities to be occupied agayne, and wil repayre the places that be decayed. The desolate londe shal be buylded agayne, which afore tyme laye waist, in the sight of all them, that wēte by. Then shal it be sayde: This waist lōde is become like a garden of pleasure, and the voyde, desolate and brokē downe cities, are now stronge, and fensed agayne. Then the residue of the Heithen that lye rounde aboute you, shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which repayre that was broken downe, and plante agayne, that was made waist. Euen 1 the LORDE haue spoken it, $\tau$ wil do it in dede.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil yet once be founde agayne of $\mathfrak{y}$ house of 1srael, $九$ do this for them: ${ }^{e}$ I shal increase them as a flocke of men. Thou shalt come vp like a stormy wether, to couer the lode, and as it were a darcke cloude: thou with all thine hoostes, and a greate multitude of people with the.

Morouer, thus saieth the LORDE God: At the same tyme shal many thinges come in to thy mynde, so that thou shalt ymagyn myschefe, and saye: I wil yp to yonder playne londe, seinge they syt at ease, and dweli so safely (for they dwell all without eny walles, they haue nether barres nor dores) to spoyle them, to robbe the, to laye honde rpon their so wel inhabited wildernesses: agaynst that people, $\dot{y}$ is gathered together from amonge the Heithē, which haue gotten catell and good, and dwell in the myddest of the londe. Then shal Saba and Dedan and the marchauntes of Tharsis with all their Worthies, saye moto the: Art thou come to robbe? Hast thou gathered thy people together, because thou wilt spoyle? to take syluer and golde: to cary awaye catell and good: and to haue a greate pray?

Therfore, o thou sonne of man, thou shalt prophecie, and saye vnto Gog: Thus saieth the LORDE God: In that daye thou shalt knowe, that my people of Israel dwelleth safe: and shalt come from thy place, out of the north partes: thou and moch people with the, which ryde vpon horses, wherof there is a greate multitude and an immumerable sorte. For in my gelousy and hote displeasure ${ }^{a}$ I haue deuysed, that there shalbe a greate trouble in the londe of Israel at that tyme. The very fyszshes in the see, the foules of the ayre, the beestes of the felde, and all the men $\dot{y}$ are vpon the earth, shal tremble for feare of me.

The hilles also shalbe turned up side downe, the stayres of stone shal fall, and all walles shal syncke to the grounde. I wil call for a swearde rpon them in all my mountaynes, saieth the LORDE God: so that euery mans swearde shal be rpon another. With pestilece and bloude wil 1 punysh him: stormy rayue and hale stones, fyre and brymstone, wil 1 cause to rayne yon him and all his heape, yee and ypon all that greate people that is with him. Thus wil I be magnified, honoured, and knowne amonge the Heithen: that they maye be sure, how $\frac{t}{}$ I am y LORDE.

For the which cause I hyd my face from them, and delyuered them in to the hondes of their enemies, that they might all be slayne with the swearde. Acordinge to their mnclennesse and vnfaithfull dealinges, so haue I entreated them, and hyd my face from them. Therfore thus saieth $\hat{y}$ LORDE God: Now will I bringe agayne the captyues of Iacob, and haue merey vpon the whole house of Israel, and be gelous for my holy names sake. All their confucion and offence that they haue done agaynst me, shal be taken awaye : and so safely shal they dwell in their londe, that no man shal make them afrayed. And when I haue brought the agayne from amonge the people, when I haue gathered them together out of their enemies londes, and am praysed in them before many Heithen: then shall they knowe, that I am the LORDE their God, which suffred them to be led in to captinyte amonge the Heithen, but now haue brought them agayne in to their owne londe, and not left one of them yonder.

After that, will I hyde my face nomore from them, but will poure out my sprete rpon the house of Israel, ${ }^{b}$ saieth the LORDE God.

IN the x.sy yeare of oure captiuyte, in the begynnynge of the yeare, the x daye of the moneth : that is the xiiij yeare, after that y cite was smytten downe: the same daye came the honde of the LORDE vpon me, and caried me forth: euen in to the londe of Israel brought he me in the visions of God: and set me downe ypō a maruelous hie mountayne, wherrpon there was a buyldinge (as it had bene of a cite) towarde the north.

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose similitude was like brasse, which had a threde of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore, a sayde into me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten it in thine hert, what so euer I shal shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, therfore art thou brought hither. And what soeuer thou seyst, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

Beholde, there was a wall on the outsyde
|rounde aboute the house : the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six enbites louge a a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buyldinge, which was a meterodde, and the heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vito the east dore, and wente vp the stares, $x$ measured the postes of the dore: wherof enery one was a meterodde thicke. Euery chambre was a meterodde longe and brode: betwene the chambers were fyue cubites. The poste of the dore within the porehe, was one meterodde. He measured also the porche of the ymnermer dore, which conterned a meterodde. The measured he the entrie of the dore, that conteyned eght cubites, and his pilers two eubites: and this entrie stode inwarde.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were thre on euery syde: atike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore: which was x cubites, at the heyth of the dore xiij cubites. The edge before the chabres was one cubite brode vpo both the sydes, $\pi$ the chambres six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured $\mathfrak{y}$ dore from the rygge of one chābre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, $\mathfrak{x}$ one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also 1 x cubites hie, rounde aboute the courte dore. Before the inwarde parte vnto the fore entre of the ynnermer dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their piters within, rounde aboute vito $\hat{y}$ dore, had syde wyndowes: So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes wente rounde aboute within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

Then brought he me in to the fore courte, where as were chābres a paued workes, made in $\mathfrak{y}$ fore courte roñde aboute : xxx chābres vpon one paued worcke. Now the paued worke was a loge besyde the dores, and that was the lower paued worke. After this, he measured $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ bredth from the lower dore, vato the ynnermer courte of the out syde, which had an hundreth cubites vpon the east a the north parte. And the dore in the vttemost courte towarde the north, measured he after the lēgth and bredth: his thre chambres also on either syde, with his pilers a fore entries: which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xxy cubites: his wyndowes a porehes with his date trees, had euen like measure as the dore towarde the east : there were vij steppes to go vp vpō, $\frac{1}{}$ their porehe before them. Now $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ dore of the ymermer courte stode straight ouer agaynst the dore, that was towarde $\dot{y}$ north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C eubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, where there stode a dore towarde $\dot{y}$ south: whose pilers and porehes he measured, these had the fyrst measure, a with their porches they had wyndowes rounde aboute, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was 1 cubites, f bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp ypon: his porche stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnermer courte stode towarde the south, it he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me in to $\dot{y}$ ynnermer courte, thorow the dore of the south syde: which he measured, © it had the measure a fore sayde. In like maner, his chambres, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches rounde aboute, wyndowes of 1 cubites hye, a xxy cubites brode. The porches rounde aboute were xxy cubites longe, and y cubites brode: and his porch reached vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ vttemost courte: von his pilers there were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp rpon.

He brought me also in to the ymmost courte vpon the east syde, and measured the dore, acordinge to y measure afore sayde. His chabers, pilers and porches had enen the same measure, as the first had: $x$ with his porches he had wyudowes roude aboute. The heith was 1 eubites, $\mathrm{y}^{\circ}$ bredth xav eubites: Hisporehes reached vnto the vttemost courte: his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and viij steppes to go vp spon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the foresayde measure. Itis chābres, pilers and porehes had wyndowes rounde aboute: whose beyth was 1 cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode towarde the vttemost courte, and ypon them both were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp ypon. There stode a chambre also, whose intrauce was at the dore pilers, and there the burntoffringes were waszshed.

In the dore porche, there stode on ether syde two tables for the slaughtinge : to slaye the brentoffringes, symeoffringes and tresbaceoffringes thervjon. And on the out syde as men go forth to the north dore, there stode two tables. loure tahles stode on ether syde of the dore, that is viij tables, wherrpon they slaughted. Foure tables were of hewen stone for the burntoffringes, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hie: whervpon were layed $\hat{y}$ vessels and ornamentes, which were sed to, the burnt $\tau$ slayne offeringes, when they were slaughted. And within there were hokes foure fyngers brode, fastened rounde aboute, to hange flesh vpon, a ypon the tables was layed the offringe flesh. On the outsyle of the ynnermer dore were the syngers chambers in the inwarde courte besyde of north dore ouer agaynst the south. There stode one also, besyde the east dore north warde.
dF And he sayde vito me: ${ }^{a}$ This chanabre on the south syde belongeth to the prestes, that kepe the habitacion: and this towarde the north, is the prestes that wayte vpon the aulter: which be the sommes of Sadoch, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Leui. So he measured the fore courte, which had in length an C cubites, and as moch in bredth by the foure corners. Now the aulter stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entre of the house, aucl measured the walles by the entre dore: which were fyue cubites longe on ether syde. The thicknesse also of the dore on ether syde, was thre cubites. The legth of the porche was xx cubites, the bredth xj. cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on either syde one.

Cye pli. ©fyapter.

AFTER this he brought mo to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vj. cubites thicke, acordinge to the wydenesse of the tabernacle. The bredth of $\dot{y}$ dore was $x$. cubites, the walles of the dore on either syde fyue cubites. He measured the length therof, which conteyned xl. cubites, and the bredth xx. The wente he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore it self was sise cubites, and the bredth of the dore was vij. cubites. He measured the legth and bredth therof, which were euery one xx . cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vato me: this is the holyest of all. Ite measured also the wall of the house, which was sixe cubites. The chambres $\dot{y}$ stode rounde aboute $\dot{y}$ house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpo another, wherof there were xxxiij. And there stode postes beneth by the walles rounde aboute the house, to beare the vp : but in $\dot{y}$ wall of $y$ house they were not fastened: The syde chambres were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thorow them rounde aboute $y$ house. Thus was it wyder aboue, that from the lowest men might go to the hyest a mydde chābers. I sawe also that the house was very hye rounde aboute. The foundacion of the syde chambres was a meterodde (that is sixe cubites) brode. The thicknesse of the syde wall withont, conterned fyue cubites, a so dyd $\mathfrak{y}$ outwall of the chābers in $\dot{y}$ house.

Betwene the chambers, was the wydenes xx. cubites rounde aboute $\dot{f}$ house. The chambre dores stode ouer agaynst the out wall, the one dore was towarde the north, $\dot{y}$ other towarde the south: and the thicknesse of the outwall was v cubites rounde aboute. Now the buyldinge that was separated towarde the west, was lxx. cubites wyde: the wall of the buyldinge was $v$ cubites thicke rounde aboute, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C. cubites longe, and the separated buyldinge with the wall were an C. cubites loge also. The wyduesse before the house and of it $\dot{y}$ was separated towarde the east, was an C. cubites.

And he measured the length of the buyldinge before and behinde with the chabbers ypon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C. cubites. The ynnermer temple, the porch of the fore courte, $\dot{y}$ syde postes, these thre had syde wyndowes, and pilers rounde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde tp to the wyndowes: The wyndowes them selues were syled ouer with bordes: © thus was it aboue the dore, vato the ymmost house, and without also: Yee the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer with greate bordes. There were Cherubins and date trees made also, so that one date tre stode euer betwixte two Cherubins: One Cherub had two faces, $y$ face of a man lokinge asyde towarde the date tre, and a lyons face on the other syde. 'Thus was it made roude aboute in all the house: Yee the Cherubins [^725]and date trees were made from the grounde vp aboue the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The bypostes of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the sanctuary was, euen as it appeared vnto me afore in $\dot{y}$ vision. The table was of wodde, thre cubites hie and two cubites longe: his comers, the length and the walles were of wodde. And he sayde vnto me: This is the table, that shal stonde before the LORDE. The temple and the holiest of all had ether of them two dores, and euery dore had two litle wiekettes which were folden in one ypon another, on euery syde two. And vpon the dores of the temple there were made Cherubins and date trees, like as vpon the walles: and a greate thicke balke of wodde was before on the out syde of the porche. Vpo both the sydes of the walles of the porche, there were made depe wyndowes and date trees, hauynge beames and balkes, like as the house had.

a THEN caried he me out in to the fore courte towarde the north, a brought me in to the chambre that stode ouer agaynst the backebuyldinge northwarde, which had the length of an C. cubites, whose dore turned towarde the north. The wydenesse conteyned L. cubites, ouer agaynst the xx. cubites of the ymnermer courte, a agaynst the paued worke that was in the fore courte. Besyde all these thre there stode pilers, one oner against another: And before this chäbre there was a walkinge place of $x$. cubites wyde, and within was a waye of one cubite wyde, and their dores towarde the north. Thus the hyest chambres were allwaye narower then the lowest and myddelmost of $\dot{y}$ buildinge: for they bare chambre von chambre, and stode thre together one vpon another, not hauynge pilers like the fore courte: therfore were they smaller then those beneth and in the myddest, to reken from the grounde vpwarde.
The wall without that stode by $\hat{y}$ chambres towarde the vttemost courte vpon the fore syde of the chambres, was L. cubites loge: for the legth of y vttemost chambers in the fore courte was $L$. cubites also: but the length therof before the temple was an C . cubites. These chambres had vuder them an intraunce of the east syde, wherby a man might go in to them out of the fore courte, thorow the thicke wall of the fore courte towarde the east, right ouer agaynst the separated buyldinge. Before the same buyldinge vpō this syde there were chäbers also, which had a waye vnto them, like as the chambers on the north syde of the same length and wydenesse.

Their intraunce, fashion and dores were all of the same maner. Yee euen like as the other chamber dores were, so were those also of the south syde. And before the waye towarde the syngers steppes on the east syde, there stode a dore to go in at. Then sayde he vnto me: The chambers towarde the north a the south, which stode before the backe buyldinge: those be holy habitacions, wherin the prestes that do seruyce before the LORDE, must eate the most holy offrnges : and there must they laye the most holy offringes: meat offringes, symeoffringes $\tau$ trespaceoffringes, for it is an holy place. When the prestes come therin, they shal not go out in to the fore courte: but (seynge they be holy) they shall leaue the clothes of their ministracion, and put on other garmentes, when they haue eny thinge to do with the people.

Now when he had measured all the ynnermer house, he brought me forth thorow the east porte, and measured the same rounde aboute. He measured the east syde with $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ meterodde, which rounde aboute conteyned v. C. meteroddes. And the north syde measured he, which conteyned rounde aboute euen so moch. The other two sydes also towarle the south and the west (which he measured) conteyned ether of them v. C. meteroddes. So he measured all $\dot{y}$ foure sydes where there wente a walle rounde aboute v. C. meteroddes longe, and as brode also, which separated the holy from the unholy.

CI he brought me to $\hat{y}$ dore, that turneth towarde the east. Behoide, the came the glory of the God of Israel from out of the east, whose voyce was like a greate noyse of waters, and the earth was lightened with his glory. His sight to loke vpon was like the first, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ that I sawe, when I wente in, what tyme as the cite shulde haue bene destroyed: and like the vision that I sawe by the water of Cobar. ${ }^{\text {a }}$ Then fell 1 vpon my face, but the glory of the LORDE came in to the house thorow the east dore. So a wride toke me vp, and brought me in to $\hat{y}$ ymmermer courte : t behokte, the honse was full of the glory of the LORDE.

I herde one speakinge wnto me out of the honse, and there stode one by me, that sayde vito me: ${ }^{\text {" }} \mathrm{O}$ thou some of man, this rowme is my seate, and the place of my fotesteppes: where as 1 wil dwell amonge the children of Israel for euermore: so that the house of Israel shal nomore defyle my holy name: nether thei, ner their kinges, thorow their whordome, thorow their hie places, a thorow the deed bodies of their kinges: which haue buylded their thresholdes in maner harde spon my thresholdes, and their postes almost at my postes: so that there is but a bare wall betwiste me and them.

Thus haue they defyled my holy name with their abhominacions, that they haue cōmitted. Wherfore I haue destroyed them in my wrath: But now they shal put awaye their whordome and the deed bodies of their kinges out of my sight, that I maye dwell amoge them for enermore. 'Therfore (o thou sonne of man) shewe thou the housholde of Israel a temple, that they maye be ashamed of their wickednesse, and measure them selues an example therat.

And when they be ashamed of all their workes, then shewe them the fourme and fashion of the temple: the eomynge in, the goinge out, all the maner and descripcion therof, yee all the vses and ordinaunees of it, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they maye kepe $\tau$ fulfill all the fashions and customes therof.

This is the descripcion of the house: Aboue ${ }^{\text {y }}$ po the mount rounde aboute all the corners, it shalbe $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ holiest of all. Beholde, that is the descripcion and fashion of the house. This is the measure of the aulter (after the true cubite: which is a spanne longer then another cubite) his botome in the myddest was a cubite longe and wyde, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute it, was a spanne brode. This is the heyth of the aulter: From the grounde to the lower steppes the length is two cubites, and the bredth one cubite: and from the lower steppes to the higher are foure cubites, t the bredth but one cubite.

[^726]${ }^{4}$ The aulter was foure cubites hie, a from the aulter vpwarde stode foure hornes, and it was xij cubites longe and xij cubites brode, ypon the foure comers: the coneringe of the aulter was xiiij cubites longe and brode vpon the foure corners, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute, had half a cubite: and the botome therof rounde aboute one cubite: his steppes stode towarde the easte. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thus sajeth the LORDE God: these are the ordinaunces and lawes of the aulter, in the daye whe it is made, to offre burntoffringes, and to sprenkle bloude ther ypon. ${ }^{e}$ To the prestes, to $\dot{y}$ Leuites that be of the sede of Sadoch, and treade before me to do me seruyce, saieth the LORDE God: Vnto these geue thou a yonge bullocke, for a synoffringe: © take the bloude of him at sprenkle his foure hornes withal, $t$ the foure corners of the aulter coueringe, with the ledge that goeth rounde aboute: herewith shalt thou clense it, ${ }^{\prime}$ and reconcile it. Thou shalt take the bullock also of the synoffringe, a burne him in a seuerall place with out the Sanctuary.

The nexte daye, take a gootbuck without blemish for a synoffringe, to reconcile the aulter withall: like as it was reconciled with $\dot{y}$ bullocke. Now when thou hast made it elene, then offre a yonge bullocke without blemish, and a ramme out of the flocke without blemish also: ${ }^{8}$ Offre them before the LORDE, and let the prest east salt therypon, "and geue them so vnto the LORDE for a burntoffringe. Seuen dayes shalt thou bringe, euery daye a gootbucke. A yonge bullocke t a ramme of the flocke (both without blemish) shal they offre. Seuen dayes shal they reconcile and clense the aulter, toffre apon it. When these dayes are expired, then rpon the viij daye and so forth, the prestes shal offre their burntoffringes and healthoffringes vpo $\dot{y}$ aulter: so wil I be mercifull vnto you, saieth the LORDE God.

AFTER this, he brought me agayne to $\dot{y}$ ( ${ }^{\text {A }}$ outwarde dore of the Sanctuary on the east syde, and that was shut. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: This dore shal be stil shut, and not opened for eny má to go thorow

[^727]it, but only for the LORDE God of 1sracl: yee he shal go thorow it, els shal it be shut still. The prynce himself shal come thorow it, that he maye eate bred before the LORDE. At the porche shal he come in, and there shal he go out agayne. ${ }^{a}$ Then brought he me to the dore, vpon the north syde of the house. And as I loked aboute me, beholde, the glory of the LORDE fylled the house: and 1 fell downe vpon my face. So the LORDE spake vnto me: O thou sonne of man, fasten this to thine herte, beholde, and take diliget hede to all that I wil saye vnto the, concernynge all the ordinaunces of the LORDE and all his lawes: pondre well with thine herte the commynge in of the house and the goinge forth of the Sanctuary: and tell that obstinate housholde of Israel: Thus saieth the LOLiDE
3 God: O house of Israel, ye have now done ynough with all youre abhominacios, seynge that ye have brought in to my Sanctuary straungers, hauynge vncircumcised hertes a flesh, where thorow my Säctuary is defiled, whē ye offre my bred, fat, a bloude.

Thus with all youre abhominacions ye haue broken my couenaunt, and not kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary: but set kepers of my Sanctuary, euen after youre owne mynde. Therfore thus saieth $\%$ LORDE God: Of all the straungers that dwell amoge the childrē of Israel, no straunger (whose herte a flesh is not circumcised) shal come within my Sanctuary: No ner the Leuites that be gone backe fro me, and haue disceaned the people of Israel with erroures, goinge after their Idols: therfore shal thei beare their owne wickednes. Shulde they be set and ordened to ministre, vnder the dores of the house of my Sanctuary? and to do seruyce in the house: to slaye burntoffringes and sacrifices for $\frac{y}{y}$ people: to stōde before them, ant to serue them: seynge the seruyce that they do them, is before their Idols, and cause the house of Israel to stomble thorow wickednesse?
${ }^{6}$ For the which cause I have pluckte out myne honde ouer them (saieth the LORDE) so that now they must beare their owne iniquyte, and not to come nye me, to serue me with their preasheade, in my Sanctuary, and most holyest of all: that they maye beare their owne shame and abhominacions, which [^728]they have done. Shulde I vse them to be porters of the house, and to all the sermyce $\frac{t}{y}$ is done therin? ${ }^{\text {E }}$ But the prestes $\hat{y}$ Leuites the somnes of Sadoch, that kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary, when the children of Israel were gone fro me: shal come to me, to do me seruyce, to stonde before me, and to offie me the fat and the blonde, saieth the LORDE God.

They shall go in to my Sanctuary, and treade before my table, to do me scruyce, and to waite vpō myne ordinannces. Now whe they go in at the dores of the ymermer courte, they shal put on lymynge cluthes, so that no wollyne come vpon them: whyle they do sernyce rnder the dores of y ynnermer courte, and within. They shal haue fayre lynnynge bonettes upon their heades, and lymynge breches ypon their loynes, which in their laboure they shat not put aboute them: And when they go forth to the people in to the outwarde courte, they shal put of the clothes, wherin they have ministred, and laye them in the habitacion of the Sanctuary, $\tau$ put on other apparell, lest they onhalowe $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ people with their clothes.
${ }^{d}$ They shal not shaue their heades, ner norish the bushe of their hayre, but roude their heades only. 'All the prestes that go in to the ynmust courte, shall drynke no wyne. They shall mary no wydowe, nether one that is put from hir huszbonde: but a mayde of the sede of the house of Isracl, or a wydowe, that hath had a prest before.
${ }^{\prime}$ They shal shewe my people the difference betwene the holy and vuholy, betwiste the clene and vnclene. They shal come at no deed persone, to defyle them selues: (excepte it be father or mother, sonne or doughter, brother or sister that hath had yet no husbonde) in soch they maye be defyled.

And when he is clensed, there shal be rekened vito him rij dayes: and yf he go in to the Sanctuary agayne to do seruyce, he shal bringe a synoffiringe saieth the LORDE (iorl. "They shall hane an heretage, yee I my self wilbe their heretage: els shall ye geue

And from this measure, namely of xxv M metteroddes longe, and x M brode, thou shalt measure, wherin the sanctuary and the holiest of all maye stonde.

The resydue of that holy grounde shall be the prestes, which do seruyce in the Sanctuary of the LORDE, and go in before the LORDE to serue him, that they maye haue rowme to dwell in.

As for the Sanctuary, it shal stonde for itself: and to the Leuites that serue in the house, there shalbe geuen xx habitacions, of the xuv M lēgth $x$ x M bredth: ye shal geue also vnto the cite a possessio of y Mmeteroddes brode, $\pi \times x v$ M longe, besyde the parte of $\dot{y}$ Sanctuary: that shal be for the whole house of Israel. Ten Battes make one Homer: for one Homer maketh ten Battes. And one lābe from two hundreth shepe out of the pasture of Israel, for a meatoffrynge, burntoffrynge and healthoffrynge, to recocile them, sayeth the LORDE God. All the people of the londe shal geue this heaue offrynge with a fre wil. Agayne, it shal be the prynces parte to offre burntoffrynges, meatoffrynges and drynkoffrynges vnto the LORDE, in the holy dayes, new Moones, Sabbathes, and in all the hye feastes of the house of Israel. The synoffrynge, meatofferynge, brentofferynge $\pi$ healthoffringe shal he geue, to recocile the house of Israel.
 of the first moneth thou shalt take a yoge bullocke without blemysh, and clense the Sanctuary.

So the prest shal take of the bloude of $\dot{y}$ synoffrynge, and sprenkle it vpon the postes of the house, and ypon the foure corners of the aulter, with the dorepostes of the ynnermer eourte. And thus shalt thou do also the seuenth daye of $\mathfrak{y}$ moneth (for soch as haue synned of ignoraunce, or beynge disceaued) to reconcile the house withall. Vpon if xiiij. daye of the first moneth ye shal kepe Easter. ${ }^{1}$ Seue dayes shal the feast eontrnue, wherin there shal no sower ner lenēded bred be eatē.

Ypon the same daye shal $\dot{f}$ prynce geue for himself and all the people of the londe, a bullocke for a synoffringe. And in the feast of the seuen dayes he shal offre euery daye a bullocke a a ram, that are with out blemysh, for a burntoffrynge vato the LORDE: © an he goate daylie for a synoffrynge. For the meatoffrynges he shall geue euer an Epha to a ${ }^{9}$ CHUS sayeth the LORDE God: $: \stackrel{f}{y}$ dore of the ynnermer courte towarde the east, shall be shut the vj. worke dayes: but in the Sabbath and in the daye of the nes Moone, it shalbe opened. 'Then shal the prynce come vnder the dore porche, $\tau$ stonde still without by the dore cheke. So $\underset{y}{\circ}$ prestes shall offre vp his burnt a healthoffrynges. And he shal worshipe at the dore poste, and go his waye forth agayne: but y dore shal nomore be shut till the euenynge.

On the same maner shal the people of the londe also do their worshipe before the LORDE, without this dore vpon the Sabbathes and new Moones. This is now the burntoffrynge, that the pryuce shall bringe vnto the LORDE vpon the Sabbath: sixe lambes without blemysh, a a ram without blemysh, and an Epha for a meatoffringe, with y ram. As for the lambes, he maye gene as many meatoffrynges to them, as he wil, $\tau$ an Hin of oyle to an Epha. In the daye of the new moneth, it shalbe a yonge bullocke with out blemysh, sixe lambes a a ram also without blemysh. With the bullocke he shal geue an Epha, and with the ram an Epha also for a meatofferinge: but to $\dot{y}$ lambes, what he maye come by: And euer an Hin of oyle to an Epha. When the prynce cometh, he shall go vnder the dore porche, and euen there departe forth agayne. But when the people of the londe come before the LORDE in the hye solempne feast, as many as come in by the north dore to do worshipe, shal go out agayne at the south dore. And they that come in at the south dore, shal go forth agayne at $\hat{y}$ north dore. There shal none go out at the dore where he came in, but shal go forth right ouer on the other syde, and the prynce shall goin and out amonge them.

Vpon the solempne and hie feaste dayes, this shalbe the meatofferynge: An Epha to a bulloek, and an Epha to a ram: and to the lambes, as many as he wil, but ener an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Now when the prynce [^730]bryngeth a burntofferynge oran bealthofferynge with a fre wil vnto the LORDE, the east dore shalbe opened vato him, $\dot{y}$ he maye do with his burnt $\mathbb{}$ healthofferynges, as he doth upo the Sabbath: and when he goeth forth, the dore shal be shut after him agayne. He shal daylie brynge vnto the LORDE a lambe of a yeare olde without blemish for a burntofferynge: this shall he do euery mornynge. And for a meatofferynge he shal geue the sixte parte of an Epha, a the thirde parte of an Iin of oyle (to myngle with the cakes) euery mornynge. Yee this shalbe a daylie meatofferinge vito the LORDE, for an euerlastinge ordinannce: $\pi$ thus shal the lambe, the meatofferynge and oyle be geuen euery mornynge, for a dailie burntofferinge.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: If the prynce geue a gifte vito eny of his sonnes, then shall it be his sonnes heretage perpetuall, $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ he maye possesse it. But yf he wil gene one of his seruauntes some of his heretage, ${ }^{a}$ it shall be his to the fre yeare, and the to returne agayne vnto $\hat{y}$ prynce: ${ }^{\circ}$ for his heretage shalbe his sonues only. The prynce also shal take none of the peoples enheritaunce, ner put the from their possession: but to his owne sonnes shal he geue his possession, that my people be not scatred abrode, but that euery man maye haue his owne.

And he brought me thorow the intrannce at the syde of the dore to $y$ habitacion of the Sanctuary, that belongeth to $\dot{y}$ prestes and stode towarde the north, a beholde, there was a place vpon the west syde, then sayde he rnto me: This is the place, where the prestes shall dight the trespace and synofferynges, a bake $\frac{8}{g}$ meatofferynges: that they nede not beare the in to the outwarde courte, and so to vihalowe the people. so he brought me in to the vttemost courte, rounde abolte all the foure corners. Beholde, in euery corner of $\mathfrak{y}$ fore courte, there was yet a litle courte. Yee in all the foure corners of the courte, there was made a litle courte of xl. cubites longe, and xxx. cubites brode: these foure litle courtes were of one like measure, a there went a rygge wall rounde aboute them all foure, voler the whieh there were harthes made rounde aboute. Then sayde he vnto me: 'This is the kechin, where the ministers of the house shal dight the slayne offerynges of the people.

The Nbij. Cluapter.

${ }^{3}$ AFTER this he brought me agayne before the dore of the house: $\pi$ beholde, there guszshed out waters from vider ${ }^{\circ}$ postes of the house eastwarde (for the house stode towarde the east) that rame downe ypo the right syde of the house, which lyeth to the anlter south warde. The caried he me out to the north dore, and brought me forth there rom eastwarde. Beholde, " there came forth the water vpon the right syde. Now whan the man $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ had the meterodile in his honde wente out vito the east dore, he measured a M. cubites, a the he brought me thorow f water, eue to the ancles: so he measured yet a thousande, $\pi$ brought me thorow $f$ water agayne ynto the knees: yet measured he a thousande, and brought me thorow the water mnto the loynes. After this he measured a thousande agayne, then was it soch a ryuer, $\frac{t}{y}$ 1 might not wade thorow it: The water was so depe, that it was nedefull to haue swymmed, for it might not be waded ouer. And he sayde vito me: hast thou sene this, o thou some of mars? and with that, he brought me to the ryuer banck agayne.

Now when I came there, there stode many trees vpon ether syde of the ryuer bācke. Then sayde he vnto me: This water that floweth out towarde the east, and rumneth downe in to the playne felde, commeth in to the see: and from the see it runneth out, a maketh the waters whole. Yee all that liue and moue, where vnto this ryuer commeth, shal recouer. And where this water cometh, there shalbe many fysh. For all that commeth to this water, shall be lusty and whole. By this riuer shal the fyszshers stonde from Engaddi monto En Eglaim, a there sprede out their nettes: for there shalbe greate heapes of fysh, like as in the mayne see. As for his claye and pyttes, they shal not be whole, for why, it shalbe occupide for salt.

By this ryuer von both the sydes of the shore, there shall growe all maner of frutefull trees, whose leaues shall not fall of, nether shat their frute perish: ${ }^{b}$ but euer be rype at their monethes, for their water rumneth out of the sanctuary. His frute is good to eate, and his leaf profitable for medycine. 'Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Let this be the border, ${ }^{\circ}$ Kach. 13. c. and 14. b. ${ }^{6}$ Psal. 1. a. ${ }^{〔}$ Gen. 29. c.
wherin ye shall deuyde the londe vato the xij. trybes of Israel, with the lyne. Parte it indifferently vnto one as vnto another: ' of the which lode I swore vnto youre fathers, that it shulde fall to youre enheritaunce.

This is the border of the londe vpon the north syde, from the mayne see, as men go to Zadada: namely, Hemath, Berotha, Sabarim : from the borders of Damascus and Hemath vnto Hazar Tichon, that lieth vpon the coastes of Hauerà. Thus the borders frō the see forth, shalbe Hazar Euan, the border of Damascus the north, and the borders of $\mathrm{He}-$ math : that is the north parte.

The east syde shal ye measure from Haueran and Damascus, from Galead and the londe of Israel by lordane and so forth, from the see coast, that lieth eastwarde : and this is the east parte.

The south syde is, from Thamar forth to the waters of strife vnto Cades, ${ }^{d}$ the ryuer, to the mayne see: and that is the south parte.

The west parte: namely the greate see from the borders therof, till a man come unto Hemath : this is the west parte.

This londe shal ye parte amonge you, acordinge to the trybes of Israel, and deuyde it to be an heretage for you, and for the straügers that dwel amōge you, and begette children.
${ }^{\varepsilon}$ For ye shal take them amonge the childre of 1sraell, like as though they were of youre owne housholde and countre, and they shal haue heretage with you amonge the childrē of Israel.

Loke in what trybe the straunger dwelleth, in the same trybe shal ye geue him his heretage, saieth the LORDE God.

Certayne reuelacions of thinges for to come: some, of the delyueraunce frō the captiuyte of Babilon: some, of the destruccion of Ierusalem : some, concernynge the latter dayes.

$\mathbb{C}$ ye first $\mathbb{C} y$ apter.

${ }^{2}$ ITN y thirde yeare of y raigne of Ioachim kyuge off Iuda, ${ }^{a}$ came Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon vnto Ierusalem, a beseged it: and the LORDE delyuered Ioachim the kynge off Iuda in to his honde, with certayne ornamentes of the house off God, which he caried awaye vnto the londe of Semar, to the house of his god, and there brought them in to his gods treasury. And the kynge spake vnto Asphenes $\mathfrak{y}$ chefe chamberlayne, that he shulde brynge him certayne of the children of Israel, that were come of the kynges sede and of prynces, yōge spryngaldes with out eny blemish but fayre ad welfanored, instructe in all wisdome, connynge and vnderstōdinge: which were able to stonde in the kynges palace, to reade, and to lerne for to speake Caldeish.

Vnto these the kinge appoynted a certayne porcion of his owne meate and of the wine, which he drancke himselff, so to norish the thre yeare: that afterwarde they might stonde before the kynge. Amonge these now were certayne of the children off Iuda: namely Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias. Vnto these the chefe chamberlayne gaue other names, and called Daniel, Balthasar: Ananias, Sydrac: Misael, Misac: and Asarias, Abdenago. But Daniel was at a poynt with himself, that he wolde not be defyled thorow the kynges meate, "ner $\dot{y}$ wyne which he ${ }^{5}$ Gen, 43. f. Tob, 1. b. Iudit. 12. a.
drōke. And this he desyred off the chefe chāberlayne, lest he shulde defyle himselff. So God gaue Daniel fauoure and grace before y chefe chamberlayne, that he sayde vnto him: I am afrayed off my lorde the kynge, which hath appoynted you youre meate and drynke: lest he spye youre faces to be worse lykynge then the other spryngaldes of youre age, ad so ye shal make me loose my heade vato $\mathfrak{y}$ kynge.

Then Daniel answered Melassar, whom the chefe chamberlayne had set ouer Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Asarias, and sayde: O proue but ten dayes with thy seruauntes, and let vs haue potage to eate, and water to drynke: then loke von oure faces, and theirs that eate off the kynges meate. And as thou seyst, so deale with thy seruauntes. So he consented to them in this matter, ad proued thē x. dayes. And after $\mathfrak{y}$ ten dayes, their faces were better lykinge $\mathbb{t}$ fatter, then all the yonge spryngaldes, which ate of the kinges meate.

Thus Melassar toke awaye their meate and wyne, and gaue them potage therfore. God gaue now these foure spryngaldes connynge and lernynge in all scripture and wisdome: but vnto Daniel specially, he gaue vnder-20 stondinge off all visions and dreames. Now when the tyme was expyred, that the kynge had appoynted to brynge in these yonge springaldes vnto him: the chefe chamberlayne brought them before Nabuchodonosor, and the kynge commoned with them. But amonge them all were founde none soch as Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Asarias. Therfore stode they before the kynge, which in all wisdome and matters off viderstōdinge, that he enquered off them, founde them ten tymes better, the all the soythsayers and charmers, that were in all his realme. And Daniel abode still, vnto the first yeare of kynge Cyrus.

Tlye ij. Chapter.

$\mathfrak{A}$ N the secōde yeare off the raigne of Nadreame, ${ }^{a}$ where thorow his sprete was rexed, and his slepe brake from him. Then the kynge cōmaunded to call together all $\mathfrak{y}$ soythsayers, charmers, witches and Caldees, for to shewe the kynge his dreame. So they came, and stode before the kynge. And the kynge sayde vato them: I haue dreamed a dreame, a my sprete was so troubled therwith, $\frac{t}{y} 1$ haue clene forgotten, what I dreamed. Ypon this, the Caldees answered the kynge in the Syrians speach: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer. Shewe thy seruauntes the dreame, and we shal shewe the, what it meaneth. The kynge gaue the Caldees their answere, aid sayde: It is gone fro me: Yf ye wil not make me vnderstonde the dreame with the interpretacion theroff, ye shal dye, and youre houses shal be prysed. But yff ye tell me the dreame and the meanynge therof, ye shall have off me giftes, rewardes and greate honoure: only, shewe me the dreame and the significacion of it. 'They answered agayne, and sayde: the kynge must shewe his seruauntes the dreame, and so shal we declare, what it meaneth.

Then the kynge answerde, sayenge: I perceane off a treuth, that ye do but prologe $\hat{y}$ tyme: for so moch as ye se, that the thinge is gone fro me. Therfore, yff ye wil not tell me the dreame, ye shal all haue one iudgment. But ye fayue and dyssemble with vayne wordes, which ye speake before me, to put off the tyme. Therfore tell me the dreame, ad so shall I knowe, yff ye can shewe me, what it meaneth. Vpon this, the Caldees gaue answere before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which 8 kynge speaketh of: Yee there is nether kynge prynce ner lorde, that euer axed soch thinges at a soythsayer, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyreth. Nether is there eny, that can certifie the kynge therotif, excepte the goddes: whose dwellinge is not amonge the creatures.

For y which cause the kynge was wroth $C$ with greate indignacio, and comaunded to destroye all the "yse men at Babilon: and $\underset{y}{\circ}$ proclamacion wete forth, that the wyse me shulde be slayne. They sought also to slaye Daniel with his copanyons. Then Daniel enquered Arioch the kynges stewarde, off the indgment and sentence, that was gone forth alredy to kyli soch as were wyse at Babilon. He answered, and sayde vnto Arioch beinge then the kinges debyte: Why hath the kynge proclamed so cruell a sentence? So Arioch tolde Daniel the matter. Vpon this, wente Daniel rp, and desyred the kinge, $\frac{t}{y}$ he might haue leysoure, to shewe the kynge the inter-

[^732]pretacion: and then came he home agayne a shewed the thinge vito Ananias, Misael a Asarias his companios: $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ they shulde beseke the God of heauen for grace in this secrete, that Daniel and his felowes with other soch as were wyse in Babilon, perished not. Then was the mystery shewed vnto Daniel in a visiō by nyght. Aud Daniel praysed ${ }^{\text {y }}$ God of heanes. Daniel also cryed loude, and sayde: $O$ that the name of God might be praysed for ener and euer, for wiszdome and strength are his owne: ${ }^{\text {a }}$ he chaungeth the tymes and ages: he putteth downe kynges, he setteth vp kynges: he geueth wyszdome rnto the wyse, and understödinge to those that vnderstode : he openeth the depe secretes: he knoweth $\mathfrak{y}$ thynge that lyeth in darcknesse, for the light dwelleth with him. ${ }^{b}$ I thanke the, and prayse the ( $O$ thou God off my fathers) that thou hast lent me wyszdome and strength, ז hast shewed me the thinge, that we desyred off the, for thou hast opened the kynges matter nito me.
Vpon this wente Daniel in vnto Arioch, whom the kinge had ordened to destroye the wyse at Babilon: he wente vnto him, and sayde : destroye not soch as are wyse in Babilon, but bringe me in vnto the kynge, and I shal shewe the kynge the interpretacion. Then Arioch brought Daniel in to the kynge in all the haist, and sayde vnto him: I haue founde a man amonge the presoners off Iuda, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ shal shewe the kinge the interpretacion. The answered the kynge, and sayde vnto Daniel, whose name was Balthasar: Art thou he, $\frac{i}{y}$ cāst shewe me $\mathfrak{y}$ dreame, which I have sene, the interpretacion therof? Daniel answered the kynge to his face, and sayde: As for this secrete, for the which the kinge maketh inquisicion: it is nether the wyse, the sorcerer, the charmer ner the deuell coniurer, that can certifie the kynge off it: Only God in heane cà open secretes, ' and he it is, that sheweth the kinge Nabuchodonosor, what is for to come in the latter dayes.

Thy dreame, and that which thou hast sene in thyne heade rpon thy bed, is this: O kynge, thou didest east in thy mynde, what shulde come herafter: So he that is the opener off mysteries, telleth the, what is for to come. As for me, this seerete is not shewed me, for [^733]eny wiszdome that I haue, more then eny other lyuynge: but only that I might shewe the kynge the interpretacion, a that he might knowe the thoughtes off his owne herte. Thou kynge sawest, and beholde: there stode before the a greate ymage, whose fygure was maruelous greate, and his vysage grymme. The ymage heade was of fyne golde, his brest and armes off syluer, his body àd loynes were off copper, his legges were off yron, his fete were parte off yron, and parte of earth.

This thou sawest, till the tyme that (without eny hondes) there was hewen off a stone ${ }^{d}$ which smote the ymage vpon the fete, that were both off yron and earth, and brake the to poulder: then was the yron, the earth, the copper, the syluer and golde broken altogether in peces: and became like the chaffe off corne, that the wynde bloweth awaye from $\dot{y}$ somer floores, that they cā nomore be foūde. But the stone that smote the ymage, became a greate mountayne, which fulfylleth the whole earth: This is the dreame. And now will we shewe before the kynge, what it meaneth.
${ }^{\text {c }}$ O kynge, thou art a kynge off kynges: For the God off heauē hath geuē the a kingdome, ryches, strength and maiesty : a hath delyuered the all thinges, that are amoge $\dot{y}$ children off men: the beastes off the felde, $\bar{a} d$ the foules vnder the heaué, and geuen the dominion ouer them all. Thou art that golde heade. After y there shal aryse another kingdome, which shal be lesse then thyne. The thyrde kingdome shal be lyke copper, and haue dominacion in all lōdes. The fourth kingdome shal be as stronge as yron. For like as yron brusseth and breaketh all thinges: Yee euen as yron beateth euery thinge downe, so shal it beate downe and destroye.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte of earth and parte off yron: that is a deuyded kyngdome, which neuertheles shal hane some off the yron grounde mixte with it, for so moch as thou hast sene the yron miste with the claye.

The toes of the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, signifieth: that it shalbe a kyngdome partely stronge and partely weake. And where as thou sawest yron myxte with claye: they shall myngle them selues with $\stackrel{8}{y}$ sede off symple people, a yet not contynue [^734]one with another, like as yron wil not be souldered with a potsherde.

${ }^{4}$ In the dayes off these kynges, shall the God of heauen set vp an euerlastinge kyngdome which shall not perish, and his kyngdome shall not be genen ouer to another people: Yee the same shall breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shall endure for euer.

And where as thou sawest, that without eny hondes there was cut out of the mount a stone, ${ }^{b}$ which brake the yron, the copper, $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath $\dot{y}$ greate God shewed the kynge, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretacion of it is sure.

Then the kynge Nabuchodonosor fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and commaunded that they shulde offre meatoffrynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kynge answerde Daniel, and sayde: Yee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE abone all kynges, and an opener of secretes: seynge thou canst discouer this mysterie. So the kynge made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate giftes.

He made him ruler off all the countrees of Babilon, and lorde of all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kynge for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers ouer all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remayned still in the courte by the kynge.

NABUCHODONOSOR the kynge caused a goldē ymage to be made, which was lx. cubites hye, and sixe cubites thicke. This he made to be set vp in the valley of Duran in the londe of Babilon ta sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes a nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites àd shreues, with all the rulers of the londe : $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{}$ they might come to the dedicacion of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them to gether, and came vnto the dedicatynge of $\mathfrak{y}$ ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kinge had set vp.

Now when they stode before the ymage,

- Esa, 9. b. ${ }^{\circ}$ Heb. ${ }^{19}$. c.
which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedell eried out with all his might: O ye people, kynreddes and tunges, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shalbe blowne, with y harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshipe the golden ynage, $\dot{y}$ Nabuchodonosor the kynge hath set vp. Who so then falleth not downe and boweth himself, shal euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Therfore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all kynde of Melody: the all the people, kynreddes and nacions fell downe, and bowed them selues unto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused $\hat{y}$ Iewes, and sayde vito kynge Nabuchodonosor: O kynge, God sane thy lyfe for euer. Thon beynge kynge hast geuen a commaüdemēt, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shall fall downe and bowe them selues towarde the golden ymage: who so the fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Now are there certaine lewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offices of the londe off Babilon: ${ }^{\text {c }}$ namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kynge) regarde not thy comanndemẽt, yee they will not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, $\dot{y}$ Sidrac, Misac a Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kynge. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what? o Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, will not ye serue my goddes? nor bowe youre selues to the golden ymage, that I haue set vp? wel, be redy herafter, when ye heare the noyse of the tropettes, blowne with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all $\dot{y}$ other melodies: that ye fall downe, and worshipe the ymage which I haue made. But yff ye worshipe it not, ye shal be cast immediatly in to an hote burnynge ouen. Let se, what god in there, $\dot{y}$ maye delyuer you out of my hondes?

Sydrae, Misae and Abdenago answered the kynge, and sayde: O Nabuchodonosor, we ought not to cosente vnto $\dot{f}$ in this matter, for why: ${ }^{a}$ oure God whom we serue, is able to kepe s from the hote burnynge ouen ( O kynge) and ean right wel detyuer vs out off thy hondes. And though he wil not, yet shatt thou knowe (o kynge) that we will not serue thy goddes, ner do renerēee to the ymage, 23 which thou hast set yp . Then was Nabuchodonosor full off indignacion, so that $\mathfrak{y}$ countenaunce of his face chaunged vpō Sidrac, Misac (t Abdenago. Therfore he charehed and commaunded, that the ouen shulde be made seuen tymes hoter, then it was wote to be: and spake vnto the strongest worthies that were in his hooste, for to bynde Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, and to cast them in to the hote burnynge ouen.

So these men were bounde in their cotes, hosen, shues with their other garmentes, àd cast in to the hote burnynge ouen: for the kinges commaundement was so strate, and the onen was exceadynge hote. As for the men that put in Sydrae, Misae and Abdenago, the flame off the fyre destroyed them. And these thre men Syírac, Misae and Abdenago fell downe in y hote burnynge ouen, ${ }^{6}$ beinge fast bounde.

Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge marueled, and stode $\mathrm{y} p$ in all haist: he spake vnto his comncel and sayde: dyd not ye cast these thre men bounde in to the fyre? They answered, 玉 and sayde vito the kynge: Yee o kynge. He answered and sayde: lo, for all that, yet do I se foure men goinge lowse in the myddest off the fyre, and nothinge corrupte: ' and the fourth is like an angel to loke vpon. Ypon this wète Nabuehodonosor vnto the mouth of the hote burnynge ouen: he speake also, a sayde: O Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, ye seruantes of the hye God: go forth, and come hither. And so Sydrae, Misac, and Abdenago wente out of the fyre. Then the dukes, lordes and nobles, and the kynges councell came together to se these men, vpon whom the fyre had no maner of power in their bodies: ${ }^{d}$ In so moch that the very hayre of their heade was not burnt, and their clothes

[^735]nnehaunged: Yee there was no smell of fyre felt vpon them.

Then spake Nabuchodonosor, and sayde: ${ }^{e}$ Blessed be the God of Sidrac, Misae a Abdenago: which hath sent hisangel, ād defended his seruantes, that put their trust in him: $\frac{\dot{y}}{}$ haue altered the kynges commaundement, and ioperde their bodies therypon: rather then they wolde serue or worshipe eny other god, excepte their owne God only. Therfore I wil and commaūde, that all people, kynreddes a tunges, which speake eny blasphemy agaynst the God of Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, shal dye, and their houses shalbe prysed: Beeause, there is no God ${ }^{t}$ maye sane, as this. $f$ So the kynge promoted Sidrae, Misac and Abdenago, in the londe of Babylon.
${ }^{g}$ Nabuchodonosor kynge, vnto all people, kynreddes and tunges that dwell vpon the whole earth: peace be multiplied amoge you. I thought it good to shewe the tokes in maruelous workes, $\dot{y}$ y hye God hath wrought rpon me. "O how greate are his tokes, a how mightie are his wonders? His kyngdome is an euerlastinge kyngdome, and his power lasteth for euer and ever.

$\mathfrak{C l y e}^{\text {iiij. }}$ Clyapter.

INABUCHODONOSOR beynge at rest in myne house, ad florishinge in my palace, sawe a dreame, which made me afrayed: ad the thoughtes that I had vpo my bed, with the visions of myne heade, troubled me. 'Then sent I out a commission, that all they which were of wiszdome at Babito shulde be brought before me, to tell me the interpretacion of the dreame. So there came the soythsayers, charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels: to whom I tolde the dreame, but what it betokened, they coude not shewe me: till at the last, there came one Daniel (otherwyse called Balthasar, acordinge to the name of my God) which hath the sprete of the holy goddes in him : to whom I tolde the dreame, sayenge: O Balthasar, thou prynce of saythsayers: For so moch as I knowe, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, and no seerete is hyd from the: tel me therfore, what $\hat{y}$ visio of my dreame ( ${ }^{t}$ I haue sene) maye signifie. I sawe a vision in my heade vpon my bed: and beholde, there stode a tre vpon the grounde, [^736]which was very hye, greate and mightie: $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ heyth reached vnto the heaué, and the bredth extended to all the endes of the earth: his leaues were fayre, he had very moch frute, so $\frac{t}{y}$ euery mā had ynough to eate therin.

The beastes of the felde had shadowes snder it, and the foules off the ayre dwelt in the bowes therof. Shortly, all ereatures fed of it. 1 sawe in my heade a vision vpon my bed: a beholde, a watcher (euē an holy angel) came downe from heauen, and cryed mightely, say-
3 enge: Hew downe the tre, breake off his braunches, shake of his leaues, and scatre his frute abrode: that all the beestes mave get them awaye from voder him, and the foules from his brauuches. Neuertheles leaue the grounde of his rote still in the earth, and bynde him rpon the playne felde, with cheynes of yron and stele. With the dew of heanen shall he be wet, and he shall haue his parte in the herbes of the grounde with other wylle beastes.

That mans herte off his shall be taken from him, and a beastes herte shall be geuen him, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him.

This erande of the watcher, is a comaundemèt grounded and sought out in the councel off him, that is most holy: to lerne men for to viderstonde, that the hyest hath power ouer the kyngdomes off men, ad geueth them, to whom it liketh him, and bryngeth the very outcastes off men ouer them. This is the dreame, $\frac{\dot{y}}{}$ I kynge Nabuchodonosor haue sene.

Therfore o Balthasar, tell thou me what it signifieth: for so moch as all the wyse men off my kyngdome are not able to shewe me, what it meaneth. But thou canst do it, for $\underset{y}{\dot{g}}$ sprete of the holy Goddes is in the.

Then Daniel (whose name was Balthasar) helde his peace by the space of an houre ad his thoughtes troubled him. So the kynge spake, and sayde: O Balthasar, let nether the dreame ner the interpretacion theroff feare the. Balthasar answered, sayenge: $\mathbf{O}$ my lorde, this dreame happen to thyne enemies, and the interpretacion to thyne aduersaries. As for the tre that thou sawest which was so greate a mightie, whose heyth reached vnto the heauen, and his bredth in to all the worlde: whose leaues were fayre, ad the frute moch: under the which the beastes of the felde had their habitacion, and upon whose braunches the foules of the ayre dyd syt:

Euen thou (o kynge) art the tre, greate $\tau$ strōge. Thy great nesse increaseth, $\tau$ reacheth vuto the heauen, so doth thy power to the endes of the earth. But where as the kynge sawe a watcher euen an holy angel, that came downe from heauen, and sayde: hew downe the tre, and destroye it: yet leaue the grounde of the rote in the earth, and bynde him voon the playne felde with cheynes off yron and stele: He shall be wet with the dew off heaurn, and his parte shalbe with the beestes of the felde, till senen yeares be come and gone vpon him: 'This (o kynge) is $\hat{y}$ interpretacios, yee it is the very deuyee of him, $\dot{y}^{t}$ is hyest of all, a it toucheth my lorde the kynge.

Thom shalt be east out fro men, and thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes of the felde: with grasse shalt thou be fed like an oxe. Thon must be wet with the dew of the heauen: yee seuen yeares shall come and go vpon the, till thou knowe, that the hyest hath power rpon the kyngdomes of men, ${ }^{a} x$ geueth them, to whom he lyst. Moroter, where as it was sarde, that the rote of the tre shulde be left still in the grounde: it betokeneth, $\dot{y}$ thy kyngdome shall remayne whole unto $\dot{y}$, after thou hast lerned to knowe, that the power commeth from heauen. Wherfore (o kinge) be contēt with my councel, that thou mayest lowse thy synnes with rightnousnesse, ad thyne offences with merey to poore people : for soch thinges shall prolonge thy peace. All these thynges touch the kynge Nabuchodonosor.

So after xij. monethes, the kynge walked vp and downe in the paalace off the kyngdome off Babilon, and sayde: This is the greate cite off Babilo, which 1 myself (with my power $\tau$ strength) haue made a kynges courte, for the honoure off my magesty. Whyle these wordes were yet in the kynges mouth, there fell a voyce from heaue, sayenge: O kinge Nabuchorlonosor, to the be it spoke: Thy kyngdome shall departe from the, thou shalt be east out of mens company: thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes off the felde, so that thou shalt eate grasse like as an oxe, till senen yeares be come and gone ouer the: enen vutill thou knowest, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, and that he maye gene them, voto whom it pleaseth him.

The rery same houre was this matter ful- $z^{2}$ fylled rpe Nabuchodonosor: so that he was |cast out off més cōpany, t ate grasse like an oxe. His body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his hayres were as greate as Aegles fethers, and his nales like byrdes elawes.

When this tyme was past, I Nabuchodonosor lift up myne eyes vnto heauen, and myne vuderstondinge was restored into me agayne. Then gaue I thankes snto the hyest. I magnified and praysed him that lyueth for enermore, whose power endureth allwaye, and his kyngdome from one generacion to another: in comparyson off whom, all they that dwell rpon the earth, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ are to be reputed as nothinge.

He handleth acordinge to his will, amoge $\dot{y}$ powers of heauen ${ }^{b} r$ amonge the inhabitours of the earth: and there is none that maye resiste his honde, or saye: ${ }^{c}$ what doest thou ? At the same tyme was myne inderstondynge geuen me agayne, and I was restored to the honoure of my kingdome, to my dignite, and to myne owne shappe agayne. My great estates and prynces sought vnto me, and I was set in my kyngdome agayne, so that I had yet greater worshipe.

The dyd I Nabuchodonosor, loaue, magnifie and prayse the kynge of heauen: for all his workes are true, and his wayes right. As for those that go on proudly, he is able to bringe them downe.

Cbe $\mathfrak{G}$. Chapter.

${ }^{2} B$ ALTHASAR the kynge made a greate bancket to his thousande lordes: withall these thousande he made greate cheare, and when he was dronken with wyne, he commaunded to brynge him $\dot{y}$ golden and syluer vessel, which his father Nabuchodonosor had taken out of the temple at Ierusalem: ${ }^{d}$ that the kynge and his lordes (with his quene and concubynes) might drike therout.

So they brought the golden vessel, that was take out of the temple of the LORDES house at Ierusalem. Then the kynge and his lordes with his quene and concubines dronke out of them. They dronke wyne, and praysed their Idols of golde, syluer, copper, yron, wodle and stone.

In the very same houre there appeared fyngers, as it had bene of a mans honde writynge, right ouer agaynst the candelsticke ypon the playne wall in the kynges palace: and the kynge sawe the palme of $\dot{y}$ honde $\frac{t}{y}$

[^737]' wrote. " Then chaunged the kynge his countenaunce, and his thoughtes troubled him: so that the ioyntes off his body shoke, and his knees smote one agaynst the other. Wherfore the kynge cryed mightely, that they shulde brynge him the charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels. The kynge spake also to the wyse men of Babilon, and sayde: Who so can rede this wrytynge, and shewe me the playne meanynge theroff: shall be clothed with purple, have a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and rule the thirde parte off my kyngdome.

Vpon this, came all the kynges wyse men: but they coude nether rede the wrytinge, ner shewe the kynge what it signified. The was the kynge sore afrayed, in so moch, that his coloure chaunged, and his lordes were sore rexed. So by reason off this matter, $\dot{y}$ had happened to the kynge this lordes, the quene went up herself in to the bancket house, and spake vinto the kynge, sayenge: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer: Let not thy thoughtes trouble the, and let not thy countenaunce be chaunged. For why: there is a man in thy kyngdome, that hath the sprete off the holy goddes within him, as it was sene in thy fathers dayes. He hath voderstondinge ad wysdome like the goddes. Yee the kynge Nabuchodonosor thy father made this man chefe of the soythsayers, charmers, Caldees and deuel coniurers: because that soch an abundaunt sprete, knowlege a wisdome (to expoūde dreames, to open secretes, and to declare harde dowtes) was founde in him: yee euen in Daniel, whom the kynge named Balthasar. Let this same Daniel be sente for, and he shall tell, what it meaneth.

Then was Daniel brought before the kinge. So the kynge spake into Daniel, and sayde: Art thou that Daniel, one off the presoners of Iuda, whom my father the kynge brought out of Iewry? I haue herde speake of the, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, experience and inderstōdinge, and that there hath bene greate wisdome founde in the. Now haue there bene brought me, wise and connynge charmers, to rede this wrytynge, and to shewe me the meanynge theroff: But they coude not tell me, what this matter signified. Then herde I saye, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou canst expounde darcke thinges, and declare harde doutes.

[^738]Well than, yf thou canst rede this writinge, and shewe me the meaninge therof: thou shalt be elothed with purple, haue a cheyne of golde aboute thy neeke, a rule the thirde parte of my kyngdome.

Daniel answered, and sayde before $\hat{y}$ kynge: As for thy rewardes, kepe them to thy self, or geue thy rych giftes to another: " yet not thelesse, I wil rede the wrytynge vnto $\hat{y}$ kinge, and shewe him the interpretacion therof. O kinge, God the hyest gaue vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father, ${ }^{b} \dot{y}$ dignite of a kynge, with worshipe a honoure: so $\frac{t}{y}$ all people, kynreddes a tunges stode in awe a feare of him, by reason off the hye estate, that he had lent him. For why: he slewe, whom he wolde: he smote, whom it pleased him. Agayne: whom he wolde, he set vp: and whom he list, he put downe. ' But because his herte was so proude, and his stomack set fast vuto wylfulnesse: he was deposed from his kyngly trone, and his magesty was taken from him. He was shot out from amonge men, his herte was like a beestes herte, and his dwellynge was with the wylde Asses: he was fayne to eate grasse like an oxe, and his body was wet with the dew off the heauen: till he knewe, that the hyest had power vpon the kyngdomes of men, and setteth ouer them, whom lie list.
玉 And thou his sonne (o Balthasar) for all this, hast not submitted thine hert, though thon knewest all these thinges: but hast magnified thy selff aboue the LORDE off heanen, so that the vessels off his house were brought before the: that thou, and thy lordes, with thy quene and concubynes, might drynke wye therout: And hast praysed the Idols of syluer and golde, copper ant yron, off wodde a stone: As for the God, ${ }^{d}$ in whose honde consisteth thy breth ad all thy wayes: thou hast not loaued him.

Therfore is the palme off this honde sent hither from him, to token up this wrytinge. And this is the seripture, that is written yp: Mane, Thetel, Phares. Now the interpretacion off the thynge is this: Mane, God hath nombred thy kyngdome, and brought it to an ende: Thetel, Thou art weyed in the balaunce, and art fom to light: Phares, Thy kynglome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perses.

Then commaunded Balthasar, to eloth

[^739]Daniel with purple, to hange a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and to make a proclamacion concernynge him: that he shulde be the ruler off' the thirde parte off his kyngdome. ${ }^{e}$ The very same night was lialthasar the kynge off the Caldees slayne, and Darius out of Media toke in the kyigdome, beynge lxij. yeare off age.

IT pleased Darius to set ouer his kigflome an C. and xx. lortes, which shulfle be in all his kingdome aboute. Aboue these he set thre prynces (off whom Daniel was one) that the lordes might gene aecomptes vnto them, and the kynge to be vadiseased.

But Daniel exceaded all these princes ad lordes, for the sprete off God was plenteous in him: so that the kynge was mynded to set him ouer the whole realme. Wherfore the prynces and lordes souglit, to pyke out in Daniel some quarel agaynst the kyngdome: yet coude they fynde none occasion ner fawte ypon him. For why: he was so faythful, $y^{2}$ there was no blame ner dishonesty founde in him.

Then sayde these mon: we will get no quarell agaynst this Daniel, excepte it be in the lawe off his God. Ypon this, wente the princes and lordes together vnto the kyage, and sayde thus suto him : kynge Darius, God saue thy life for ener.

All the great estates off the realme: as $\hat{y}$ prynces, dukes, senatours and iudges, are thetermed to put out a commandement off' $\hat{y}$ kynge, and to make a sure statute: namely, that who so desyreth eny peticion, ether of eny god or man (with in this axx. dayes) excepte it be only off the. O kynge: the same person maye be cast in to the Lyons demne. Wherfore, o kynge, confirme thou this statute, and make a writynge: that the thynge which the Medes and Perses hate ortened be not altered ner broken.

So Darins made the wrytynge, and confirmed it. Now when Daniel vnterstode that the wrytynge was mate, he wente in to his house: : ant the wyndowes of his hall towarde lerusalem stode open. There kneled he downe ypon his knees, thre ymes a daye: there he made his peticion, and praysed his Gotl, like as his maner was to do afore tyme.

[^740]Then these men made searche, and founde Daniel makynge his peticion, and prayenge vnto his God. So they came to the kynge, and spake before him concernynge his commaundement, sayenge: $O$ kynge, hast thou not subscribed the statute, that within xax. dayes who so requyreth his peticion off eny god or man, but only of thyself, o kynge: he shalbe east in to the denne of the Lyons? The kynge answered, ad sayde : yee, it is true. It must be as a lawe of $\dot{y}$ Medes and Perses, that mave not be broken.
'Then answered they, and sayde snto the kynge: Daniel one of the presoners of Iuda (O kynge) regardeth nether the ner thy statute, that thou hast made, but maketh his petieion thre tymes a daye. When the kynge berde these wordes, he was sore greued, and wolde haue excused Daniel, to delyuer him, and put off the matter, vnto the Sonne wēte downe, to the intent that he might saue him.

These men perceauynge the kynges mynde, sayde into him: knowe this (o kynge) that the lawe off the Medes and Perses is, that the commaundement and statute which the kynge maketh, maye not be altered. ${ }^{a}$ Then the kynge bad them brynge Daniel, and they cast him in to the Lyons denne.
The kynge also spake vito Daniel, ad sayde: Thy God, whom thou allwaye seruest, euen he shall defende the. And there was brought a stone, and layed spon the hole of the denne: this the kynge sealed with his owne rynge, and with $\dot{y}$ signet of his prynees: that the kynges commaundement concernynge Daniel, shulde not be broken.

So the kynge wente in to his palace, and kepte him sober all night, so that there was no table spred before him, nether coude he take eny slepe. But be tymes in the mornynge at the breake off the daye, the kynge arose, and wente in all haist vnto the denne off the Lyons.

Now as he came nye vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ dēne, he cried with a piteous voyce vnto Daniel: Yee $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ kige spake, and sayde vnto Daniel: O Daniel, thou seruaunt off the lyuynge God, Is not thy God (whom thou allwaye seruest) able to delyuer the from the lyons? Daniel sayde anto the kynge: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer:
${ }^{5}$ My God hath sent his angel, which hath

[^741]shut the lyons mouthes, so that they might not hurte me. For why: myne rngiltynesse is founde out before him. And as for the (o kynge) I neuer offended the.

Then was the kynge exceadinge glad, ad commaunded to take Daniel out off the denne. So Daniel was brought out of the dēne, and no maner of hurte was founde $\mathrm{vp} \overline{\mathrm{p}}$ him. For he put his trust in his God. And as for those men which had accused Daniel, the kige commaunded to bringe them, and to cast them in the lyons denne: ' them, their ehildren and their wyues. So the lyons had the mastry of them, and brake all their bones a sonder, or euer they came at the grounde.
${ }^{d}$ After this, wrote kynge Darius vnto all people, kynreddes and tunges, that dwelt in all londes: peace be multiplied with you: My commaundement is, in all my dominiō and kyngdome, that men feare and stonde in awe off Daniels God:
${ }^{\text {c }}$ For he is the lyuinge God, which abydeth euer: his kyngdome shall not fayle, and his power is enerlastynge. It is he that delyuereth, and saueth: ${ }^{f}$ he doth wonders and maruelous workes, in heauen and in earth: he hath preserued Daniel from the power of the lyons. ${ }^{g}$ This Daniel prospered in the raigne off Darius and Cirus of Persia.

Then I loked rp, and sawe: and behodle there stode before the ryuer, a ramme, which had hornes: and these hornes were hye, but one was hyer then another, and the hyest came rp last. I siwe that this ramme puszhed with his hornes, agaynst the west, agaynst the north, and agaynst the south: so that no beestes might stonde before him, ner defende them from his power: but he dyd as him listed, and waxed greatly. I toke hede vnto this, and then eame there an hegoate from the west, oner the whole earth, and tonched not the grounde.

This goate had a maruelons goodly horne betwiste his eyes, and came unto the ramme, that had the two hornes (whom I had sene afore by the ryuer syde) and ranne fearcely vpon him with his might. I sawe him drawe nye into the ramme, beynge very fearee rpon him: yee he gave him soch a stroke, that he brake his two hornes:

Nether had the ramme so moch strength as to stonde before him: but he kest him downe, trodde him vuder his fete: and no man was able to delyner the ramme out of his power.

The goate waxed exceadinge greate, and when he was at the strongest, his greate horne was broken also. Then grewe there other foure soch like in the steade, towarde the foure wyndes off the heauen. ${ }^{5}$ Yee out of one of the leest off these hornes, there came vp yet another horne, which waxed maruelous greate : towarde the south, towarde the east, and towarde the fayre pleasaunt londe. It grewe vp to the hoost off heanen, wherof it dyd east some downe to the grounde, and off the starres also, and trode them vnder fete.

Yee it grewe vp vato the prynce off the hoost, from whom the daylie offeringe was taken, and the place off his Sanctuary casten downe. And a certayne season was geuen suto it, agaynst the daylie offeringe (because of wickednesse) that it might east downe the

How longe shall this vision off the daylie saerifice and of the waistinge abhominacion endure: that the Sanctuary and the power shall so be troden vader fote? And he answered him: Vnto the euenynge a the morninge, euen two thousande and thre hurdreth dayes: then shall the Sanctuary be elensed agayne.

Now when 1 Daniel had sene this vision, and sought for the understondinge of it: beholde, there stode before me a thinge like vnto a man. And 1 herde a mans voyce in the ryuer off Vlai, which eryed, and sayde: O Gabriel, make this man vnderstonde the vision. So he came, and stode by me. But I was afrayed at his cōminge, and fell downe ypon my face.

Then sayde he vnto me: O thou sonne of man, marcke well. for in the last tyme shall this vision be fulfylled. Now as he was speakynge vnto me, I waxed faynte, so that I suncke downe to the grounde. But he toke holde upon me, and set me vp agayne, sayenge: Beholde, I will shewe the, what shall happen in the last wrath: for in the tyme appoynted it shal be fulfilled.

The ramme which thou sawest with the two hornes, is the kynge off the Medes àd Perses: but the goate is the kynge of Greke londe: the greate horne that stode betwixte his eyes, that is the pryncipall kynge. But where as it brake, and foure other rose vp in the steade : it signifieth, that out of this people shall stonde vp foure kyngdomes, but not so mightie as it.

After these kyngdomes (whyle vngodlynesse is a growinge) there shall aryse a kynge off an vushamefast face, which shall be wyse in darcke speakinges.

He shalbe mightie and stronge, but not in his owne strength. He shall destroye aboue measure, and all that he goeth aboute, shall prospere: he shall slaye the stronge and holy people. And thorow his eraftynes, falsede shall prospere in his honde, his herte shall be proude, and many one shall he put to death in his welthynesse. He shal stonde up agaynst the prynce off prynees, but he shalbe destroyed

${ }^{b}$ Turne you now vnto me, and I wil turne me vuto yon, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Ye saye: Wherin shal we turne? Shulde a man vse falsede and disceate with God, as ye vse falsede and disceate with me? Yet ye saye: wherin vse we disceate with the? In Tythes and heaue offerynges. ${ }^{c}$ Therfore are ye cursed with penury, because ye dyssemble with me, all the sorte of you.

Brynge enery Tythe in to my barne, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ there maye be meat in myne house: and proue me withall (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) yf I wil not open the wyndowes of heauen vnto you, and poure you out a blessinge with plenteousnesse. Yee 1 shal reproue the consumer for youre sakes, so that he shall not eate vp the frute of youre grounde, nether shal $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ vynyarde be baren in the felde, sayeth y LORDE of hoostes: In so moch that all people shal saye, that ye be blessed, for ye shall be a pleasaunt lōde, sayeth the LORDE off hoostes.

[^808]Ye speake hard wordes agaynst me, sayeth $\sqrt{4}$ the LORDE. And yet ye saye: What haue we spoken agaynst the? Ye haue sayed: It is but lost laboure, to serue God: ${ }^{d}$ What profit haue we for kepynge his commaundementes, and for walkinge humbly before the LORDE off hoostes? Therfore maye we saye, that the proude are happie, ${ }^{e}$ and that they which deale with vngodlynesse, are set $v p$ : for they tempte God, and yet escape.

But they that feare God, saye thus one to another: The LORDE cōsidreth and heareth it. Yee it is before him a memoriall boke written for soch as eare the LORDE, and remembre his name. And in the daye that I wil make (saieth y LORDE of hoostes) they shalbe myne owne possession: and 1 will fanoure them, like as a man fauoureth his owne some, that doth him seruyce. Turne you therfore, and considre what difference is betwixte the rightuous and vngodly: betwixte him that serueth God, ad him that serueth him not.

For marck, the daye commeth that shall burne as an ouē: ${ }^{f}$ and all the proude, yee and all soch as do wickednesse, shalbe straw: and the daye that is for to come, shall burne the vp (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) so that it shal leaue them nether rote ner braunch. But vito you that feare my name, shall the Sōne of rightuousnesse aryse, $九$ health shal be voder his winges. Ye shal go forth, a multiplie as $\dot{y}$ fat calues. Ye shal treade downe $\dot{y}$ vngodly: for they shalbe like the asshes vnder the soles of your fete, in the daye $\frac{t}{y}$ I shal make, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Remembre the lawe of Moses my seruaunt, which I committed vnto him in Orebs for all Israel, with the statutes and ordinaunces. Beholde, "I will sende you Elias ý prophet : before the comynge off the daye of the great and fearfull LORDE. THESE bokes (good reader) which be called Apocrypha, are not iudged amonge the doctours to be of like reputacion with the other seripture, as thou mayest perceaue by S . Jerome in epistola ad Paulimum. And the chefe cause therof is this: there be many places in them, that seme to be repugnaunt vnto the open and manyfest trueth in the other bokes of the byble. Neuertheles 1 haue not gathered them together to the intent that 1 wolde haue them despysed, or litle sett by, or that I shulde thinke them false, for I am not able to proue it: Yee I doute not verely, yf they were equally conferred with the other open seripture (tyme, place, and circumstaunce in all thinges considered) they shulde nether seme contrary, ner be vutruly a peruersly aledged. Treuth it is: A mas face can not be sene so wel in a water, as in a fayre glasse: nether cā it be shewed so clearly in a water that is stered or moued, as in a styll water. These a many other darek places of scripture haue bene sore stered and myxte with blynde and curetous opynions of men, which haue cast soch a myst afore the eyes of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ symple, that as longe as they be not coferred with the other places of scripture, they shall not seme other wyse to be voderstonde, then as cuvetousnes expoundeth them. But who so euer thou be that readest scripture, let the holy goost be thy teacher, and let one text expounde another moto the: As for soch dreames, visions and darck sentences as be hyd from thy vnderstondinge, commytte them vato God, and make no articles of them: But let the playne text be thy gyde, and the sprete of God (which is the author therof) shal lede the in all trueth.

As for the prayer of Salomō (which thou findest not herin) $\dot{y}$ prayer of Azarias, and the swete songe that he and his two felowes songe in the fyre: the first (namely the prayer of Salomon) readest thou in the eight chapter of the thirde boke of the kynges, so that it appeareth not to be Apocryphum: 'The other prayer and songe (namely of the thre children) haue 1 not founde amonge eny of the interpreters, but onely in the olde latyn texte, which reporteth it to be of Theodotios translacion. Neuertheles, both because of those $\frac{t}{y}$ be weake and scrupulous, and for their sakes also that loue soch swete songes of thankesgeuinge: I haue not left them out: to the intent that the one shulde haue no cause to complayne, and that the other also might haue the more occasion to geue thankes vnto God in aduersite, as the thre children dyd in the fyre. Grace be with the. Amen.

halowe them selues mnto the LORDE, to set the holy arke of the LORDE, in the house that kynge Salomo the sonne of Dauid had buylded and sayde: Ye shal nomore beare the Arke upon youre shulders. Now serue youre LORDE, a take the charge of his people of Israel, after youre ryllagies and youre trybes: acordinge as kynge Dauid the kynge of Israel hath ordened, a acordinge as Salomon his somme hath honorably prepared: Yee loke $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathbf{t}}$ ye all do seruyce in the temple, acordinge to the ordringe and distribucion of the prymei-

And vinto $\mathrm{g}_{\mathrm{y}}$ people $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ was foude, Iosias gaue xxx. thousande of shepe, lambes, kyddes and goates, a thre thonsande oxe. These the kynge (of his kyngly liberalite) gave vito the people, acordinge as he had promysed: a to the prestes (for the Passeouer) he gaue two thousande shepe of an huudreth oxē. Moroner Iechonias a Semeias and Nathanael brethreu, a Hasabias, Iehiel and Iosabad, gave them to the Passeouer, fyue thousande shepe and fyne hundreth bullockes.

And whan these thinges were brought to passe, the prestes and the Leuites stode goodly in their ordre, and had the vnleuended bred thorow out fy trybes. And after the ordringe of the pryncipall men in the trybes, they ottied vito the LORDE in the sight of the people, acordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses, ${ }^{b}$ a so they rosted the Easterlambe as acordinge was. As for the thāk offeringes a the other, they dight the in kettels a pottes, a sett them before the people with good will, and afterwarde before them selues and the prestes. For the prestes offred the fatt, vatyll the tyme was expyred, but the Leuites prepared for them selues a for their brethren the childre of Aaron. The syngers also $\mathfrak{y}$ children of Asaph stode in their ordre, acordinge as Dauid had deuysed. So dyd Asaph, Zachary a ledithū, which were appoynted by the kynge. OW whā kynge Cyrus raigned ouer the Persians, ${ }^{\text {e }}$ © whā the LORDE wolde perfourme the worde $\frac{+}{y}$ he had promysed by the mouth of the prophet leremy: the LORDE raysed vp the sprete of Cyrus, the kynge of the Persias, so $\frac{t}{y}$ he caused this wrytinge to be proclamed thorow out his whole realme, sayenge: Thus sayeth the kynge of y Persians: The LORDE of Isracl that hye LORDE hath made me kynge of the lode, and commaunded me to buylde him an house at lerusalem in Iewry. Then the pryncipall mé out of the trybes and vyllages of Iuda and Ben Iamin stode yp: so dyd the prestes also © the leuites (whō the LORDE had moued) to go vp , and to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusale.. And they that were aboute them, helped them with all maner of golde, and syluer, and catell also and with many liberall giftes, and this dyd many one, whose mynde was stered up therto. Kynge Cyrus also brought forth the vessels and ornamentes, that were halowed rnto the LORDE (which Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon had earied awaye from lerusalem, and conseerated them to his Idoll and ymage) and delyuered them to Mithridatus his treasurer, [^810]and by him they were delyuered to Salmanasar $\dot{y}$ debyte in Iewry. And this was the nobre of them: Two thousande and iiij. C. syluer boules, xxx. syluer basens, xxx. basens of golde, ij. M. and iiij. C. vessels of syluer, and a thousande besyde. All the vessels of golde aud syluer were v. M1. viij. C. and lx. These were nombred vnto Saluanasar, and them that were come agayne with him to Ierusale out of the captiuyte of Babilon. Now in the tyme of kynge Artaxerses the kynge of Persia, these men: Balemus and Nithridatus, Sabellius, Rathimus, Balthemus, Semelius $\dot{y}$ serybe, and other that dwelt in Samaria r in other places under $\mathfrak{y}$ dominion therof, Wrote a letter vito kynge Artaxerses, wherin they complayned vato the kynge of them in Iewry and Ierusalem. The letter was made after this maner:

Syr, thy seruauntes Rathimus the story wryter, Sabellius the Scrybe, © other iudges of thy courte in Celosyria and Phenices. Be it knowne and manifest to our lorde the kjnge, that the Iewes which are come vp fro you vito vs in to the rebellious and wicked cite, begynne to buylde it agayne, and the walles aboute it, and to set tp the tēple of the new. Now yf this cite and the walles therof be sett vp agayne, they shal not only refuse to geue trybutes and taxinges, but also rebell vtterly agaynst the kynge. And for so moch as they take this in hande now aboute the temple, we thought it reason, to thinke no scorne of it, but to shewe it vnto our lorde the kynge, st to certifie him therof: to the intent y yf it please the kinge, he maye cause it be sought in the bokes of olde: and thou shalt fynde soch warnynge wrytten, and shalt vuderstonde, that this cite hath allwaye bene rebellious and disobedient, that it hath subdued kynges and cities, and that the Iewes which dwell therin, haue eucr bene a rebellious, obstinate, vnfaithfull and fightinge people, for the which cause this cite is waysted. Wherfore now we certific oure lorde the kynge, that yf this cite be buylded aud occupied agayne, $\mathbb{a}$ the walles therof set up a new, thou canst haue no passage in to Celosyria and Phenices.

Then wrote the kynge to Rathimus the story wryter, to Balthemus, to Sabellius $\hat{y}$ arybe, aml to the other offieers and dwellers in Syria and Phenices, after this maner: I haue red the epistle which thou sentest vito me, and haue commaunded to make diligent search, and have founde, that the cite hath euer resisted kynges, that the same people are dishobedient, and haue caused moch warre, th that mightie kynges haue raigned in lerusalem, which also haue raysed vp taxinges of Syria and Phenices. Wherfore, I haue commauded those people, that they shal not buylde the cite, that they make no more in it, and that they procede no further with the buyldinge: for so moch as it might be the cause of warre, and displeasure vnto kynges.

Now whan Rathymus and Sabellius the scrybe and the rulers in the londe had red the wrytinge of kynge Artaxerses, they gatt them together, and came in all the haist to Ierusalem with an hoost of horsemen, and with moch people of fote, and forbad them to buylde. And so they left of from buyldinge of the temple, vnto the seconde yeare of kynge Darius.

Che iij. Chapter.

KYNGE Darius made a greate feast vnto his seruaūtes, vnto all his courte, a to all the officers of Media and Persia, yee and to all the debytes © rulers that were vnder him, from India vnto Ethiopia, an hundreth © xxvij. countrees. So whan they had eaten, and dronken beinge satisfied, and were gone home agayne, Darius the kynge wente in to his chambre, layed him downe to slepe, and so awaked.

Then the thre yonge men, that kepte the kynges personne, and watched his body, commoned amonge them selues, and spake one to another: Let euery one of vs saye some thinge, and loke whose sentence is wyser and more excellent then the other, vnto him shal kinge Darius geue greate giftes, and clothe him with purple. He shal geue him vessels of golde to drynke in, clothes of golde and coueringes: he shall make him a costly charett a a brydle of golde, he shall geue him a bonet of whyte sylke and a chayne of golde aboute his neck: yee he shal be the seconde a pryncipall nexte vnto kynge Darius, © that because of his wyszdome, and shalbe called $\dot{y}$ kynges kynsman.

So eucry one wrote his meaninge, sealed it and layed it vnder the kinges pelowe, and sayde: whan the kynge aryseth, we will geue him oure wrytinges: and loke whose worde the kynge and his chefe lordes iudge to be the most wysely spoken, the same shall haue the victory. One wrote: wyne is a stronge thinge. The secöde wrote: The kynge is ströger. The thirde wrote: wemen haue yet more strength, but aboue all thinges yg trueth beareth awaye the victory. Now whan the kynge was rysen vp , they toke their wrytinges and delyuered them rito him, and so he red them. Then sent he forth to call all his chcfe lordes, all the debytes © rulers of the countrees of Media and Persia. And whan they were sett downe in the councell, the wrytinges were red before them. And he commaunded to call for $\mathfrak{y}$ yonge mè, $\frac{t}{y}$ they might declare their meanynges the selues by mouth. So when they were sent for, and came in, $\hat{y}$ kynge sayde vnto them: shew ws and make rs to vaderstōde, what the thinges are that ye haue wrytten.
Then beganne the first (which had spoke of the strength of wyne) đ sayde: O ye men, wyne is maruelous ströge, ${ }^{a}$ and ouercometh them $\stackrel{+}{y}$ drynke it: it disceaueth the mynde, 匹 bryngeth both the poore man a $\dot{y}$ kynge to dotage and vanite. Thus doth it also with the bondman and with the fre, with the poore $\tau$ rych: it taketh awaye their understondinge, and maketh them careles and mery, so that none of them remembreth eny heuynes, dett or dewtie: It causeth a man to thinke also that $\mathfrak{y}$ thinge which he doth, is honest and good: and remembreth not that he is a kynge, nor $\frac{t}{y}$ he is in auctorite, a $\frac{t}{y}$ he ought not to do soch thinges. Morouer, whan men are drynckinge, they forgett all frendshipe, all brotherly faithfulues and loue: but as soone as they are droncké, they drawe out the swerde a wil fight: a whā they are layed downe frō the wyne, a so rysen vp agayne, they can not tell what they dyd. Iudge ye now, Is not wyne the strongest? For who wolde els take in hande, to do soch thinges? And whan he had spoken this, he helde his tonge.

©je iiii. © $C$ yapter.

 HEN the seconde (which had sayde, ${ }_{\mathrm{t}}^{\dot{t}}$ the kynge was stronger) begane tospeake, sayēge: O ye men, are not they the strongest đ most excellent, $\frac{t}{y}$ cōquere the löde $a$ the see, $\mathbb{a}$ all $\dot{y}$ is in $\dot{y}$ see $\mathbb{a}$ in the earth? Now is the kynge lorde of all these thinges, © hath dominion of the all: © loke what he comaüdeth, it is done. Yf he sende his mé forth a warfare, they go and breake downe hilles, walles a towres. They are slayne, © slaye (other men) them selues, $\mathbb{a}$ ouer passe not $\dot{y}$ kynges worde. If they get the victory, they brynge the kynge all the spoyle. Likewyse, the other y medle not with warres and fightinge, but tyll the grounde: whan they reape, they brynge trybute vito $\hat{y}$ kynge. And yf $\ddot{y}$ kynge alone do but comaunde to kyll, they kyll: yf he comaunde to forgene, they forgeue : yf he cōmaunde to smyte, they smyte: yf he byd dryue awaye, they dryue awaye: yf he commaunde to buylde, they buyilde: yf he cömañde to breake downe, they breake downe: yf he comaunde to plante, they plate. The comon people © $\hat{y}$ rulers are obedient vato him. And $\hat{y}$ kynge in the meane season sytteth ini downe, eateth and drynketh, $\uparrow$ taketh his rest: thè kepe they watch roūde aboute $\hat{y}$ kinge, © not one of the darre gett him out of $\bar{y}$ waye, to do his owne busynes, but unust be obediēt vnto $\dot{y}$ kinge at a worde. Judge ye now o ye men, how shulde not he go farre aboue, vnto whom men are thus obediét? And whan he had spokē this, he helde his tonge. The thirde (whose name was Zorobabel, which had spokē of wemen © of $\hat{y}$ trueth) begane to saye after this maner: $O$ ye mé, it is not $\dot{y}$ greate kynge, it is not the multitude of mê, nether is it wine $\dot{y}$ excelleth: Who is it thē, $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ hath £ lordshipe ouer the? Haue not wemen borne the kynge, $\mathbb{\tau}$ all $\hat{y}$ people $\dot{y}$ rule these thinges? Haue not wemē borne thē, ז brought thē vp, ${ }_{i}^{t}$ plante the vynes, wherout $\dot{y}$ wyne cometh? They make garmētes for all mé, they geuc honour vnto all men, a with out wemen can not men lyue. Yf they gather golde © syluer r all precious thinges, a se a fayre a wel fauoured womā, they leaue all together, and turne their eyes onely vito the woman, a gape ypon her, © haue more desyre vnto her, then vuto the syluer $\mathbb{I}$ golde, or eny maner of precious thinge. A mā leaueth his father ${ }^{b} \stackrel{\dot{y}}{ }$ brought him tp , he leaueth his owne naturall coutre, and cleueth vnto the woman: yee he [^811]ioperdeth his life with the woman, and remembreth nether father, ner mother, ner countre. By this then ye must nedes knowe, $y^{t}$ wemen haue $\mathfrak{y}$ domynion ouer you.

Doth it greue you? A mā taketh his swerde ta goeth his wave to steale, to kyll, to murther, to sayle rpon the see, a sexth a lyon, and goeth in the darcknes: and when he hath stollen, disceaued $\tau$ robbed, he bringeth it vnto his loue. Agayne, a man loueth his wyfe better then father and mother: yee many one there be, that renne out of their nyttes $\mathbb{t}$ become bondinen for their wyues sakes: many one also haue perished, $\frac{1}{}$ haue bene slayne, a hane synned because of wemen.

And now beleue me, I knowe a kynge which is greate in his power, a all lōdes stōde in awe of him, a no man darre laye hande vpon him : yet dyd I se, ${ }^{\ddagger}$ A pame ( ${ }^{\circ}$ daughter of the greate kynge Bartacus) the kynges cócubine, satt besyde the kynge rpo the right häde, and toke of his crowne from his heade, and set it rpon hir owne heade, and smote the kynge with hir left hande. Morouer, the kynge loked ypō her with open mouth: yf she laughed vpon him, he laughed also: but yf she toke eny displeasure with him, the kynge was fayne to flater her, a to geue her good wordes, till he had gotten hir fauoure agayne.

O ye men, are not wemen then stronger? Greate is the earth, and hie is the heauen that do these thinges. Then the kynge of the prynces loked one vpon another. So he beganne to speake of the trueth: O ye men, are not weme stronger? Greate is the earth, hye is the heauen, swyft is the course of the Sonne, he compaseth the heauen rounde aboute, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ and fetcheth his course againe to his owne place in one daye. Is he not excellent that doth this? yee greate is the trueth, and stronger then all thinges. All the earth calleth spon the trueth, the heauen prayseth it, all workes shake and tremble at it, and with it is no vnrighteous thinge. Wine is vnrighteous, the kynge is varighteous, wemen are vnrightcous: all the children of men are mn righteous, yee all their workes are mrighteous, and there is no trueth in them, in their vnrighteousnes also shall they be destroyed and perish. ${ }^{6}$ As for ${ }^{\circ}$ trueth, it endureth, and is allwaye stronge : it lyueth, and cōquereth for euermore worlde without ende.

- Eccls. 1. a.
${ }^{5}$ Esa, 40. 3. Psal. 116. a.

The trueth aceepteth no personnes, it putteth no difference betwixte rych or poore, betwiste $\stackrel{f}{\mathrm{y}}$ mightie or smple, but doth right vnto euery má, whether they be euel or good, a all men are lourngly dealt withall in the workes of it. In the iudgment of it there is no mrighteous thinge, but strength, kingdome ${ }^{1}$ power and maiesty for euermore. Blessed be the God of trueth.

And with that he helde his toge, and all y people cried r sayde: Greate is the trueth, and aboue all. Then sayde the kynge rnto him: Axe what thou wilt, more then is appoynted in the wrytinge, and I shal geue it the, for thou art founde wyser then thy companyons: thou shalt sytt nexte me, and be my kynsman. Then sayde he vnto the kynge: Remembre thy promyse and vowe, whieh thou hast vowed and promysed (in the daye whan thou camest to the kyngdome) to buylde vp Ierusalem, and to sende againe all the vessels and Iewels, that were taken awaye out of Ierusalem: which Cyrus separated, whan he offred in Babilon, and wolde sende them agayne: And thy minde was to buylde up the temple, which the Edomites brēt, whan Ierusalem was destroyed by the Caldees. This onely (O kynge) is the thinge that I requyre, this is $\dot{y}$ maiesty, which, I desyre I axe of the: that thou perfourme the vowe, which thou with thine owne mouth hast made vnto the kynge of heauen.

Then Darius the kynge stode rp, and $\boldsymbol{i z}$ kyssed him, and mrote a 'letter vnto all the debytes and shreues, to all $\mathfrak{y}$ lordes and nobles, $\frac{t}{y}$ they shulde conveye him forth, $t$ all them $\dot{y}$ wolde go $\mathrm{r} p$ with him. He wrote a letter also vnto all $\dot{y}$ shreues $\frac{t}{y}$ were in Celosyria a Phenices, it rnto Libanus, $\frac{t}{y}$ thes shulde harle cedre trees from Libanns vnto Ierusalem, to buylde y cite withall. Morouer he wrote rnto all $\mathfrak{j}$ lewes that were gone out of his realme in to Iewry because of the fredome, ${ }^{t}$ no officer, no ruler ner shreue shulde come to their dores: and that all their londe which they had conquered, shulde be fre and not tributary: And that the Edomytes shulde geue oner the eities and vyllagies of the Iewes, which they had taken in: yee a that they shulde yearly geue xx . talētes to $\mathrm{i}^{\mathrm{y}}$ buyldinge of the temple, vatill the tyme that it were fynished: and to the daylie halowinge [^812]of the brent offeringes (as it is commannded) ten talentes yearly also: And $\dot{y}$ all they which come from Babilon to buylde the eite, shulde haue fre lybertie, they of their children, and all the prestes.

He wrote the greatnesse also, a commaunded that the holy garment shulde be geuen thē, wherin they ministred: and wrote that commaundementes shulde be geuen to the Leuites, vatill the daye, that the house were fynished and Ierusalem buylded vp: and comaunded that all they that watehed the cite, shulde haue their porcions and wagies.

He gaue ouer also all the vessell $\mathrm{y}^{\text {t }}$ Cyrus had separated from Babilon: a all $\frac{f}{f}$ Cyrns had geuē in cōmaundement, $\mathfrak{y}$ same charged he also, $\frac{t}{y}$ it shulde be done, $\leftrightarrows$ sent vnto Ierusalem. Now whan this yonge mā was gone forth, he turned his face towarde Ierusate, $\tau$ praysed $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ kinge of heauē, a sayde: Of $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ cometh a victory, of the cometh wyszdome a clearnesse, a I am thy seruaunt. Blessed art thou, which hast genen me wyszdome: the wyll I prayse, O LORDE, thou God of oure fathers.

And so he toke the letters, of wente vnto Babilon: And whan he came there, he tolde this vnto all his brethrè $\frac{t}{y}$ were at Babilo, $\tau$ they praysed $\stackrel{8}{y}$ God of their fathers, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he had geue them refreszshinge a lyberte to go $\mathrm{P}, \pi$ to buylde Ierusale a the temple (whieh is there called after the name of the LORDE) and they reioysed with instrumentes $\pi$ gladnesse, seuen dayes longe.

(1)e bi. Chapter.

NOT with stondinge, in the seconde yeare Zachary the sonne of Addo prophecied ypon them in Iewry and Ierusalem, in the name of the God of Israel. Then Zorobabel the some of Salathiel and Iesua the sonne of Iosedee stode $\mathrm{vp},^{h}$ and beganne to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, when the prophetes of the LORDE helped them.

At the same tyme came Sysennes the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, with the landlordes and his companyons, and sayde vnto them: Who hath bydden $九$ commaunded you to buylde the house? to make the rofe and all other thinges agayne? And who are the workemen, that buylde them? Neuer-

[^813]theles the elders of the lewes had soch grace of the LORDE, that they wolle not be lett (though they were pronoked therto) but buylded on still, rutill the tyme that kynge Darius were certified therof, and an answere receaned from him. The letter that these men sent moto kynge Darius, was after this maner:

Sysennes the ruder shreue in Syria and Phenices, and the land lordes with their copanios, which are head rulers in Syria and Phenices, sende their salutacion vato Darius the kynge. We certitie oure lorde the kynge, that we came in to the londe of lewry, a wente to Ierusalem: where we founde them buyddinge the greate house of God and the teple, with greate costly fre stone and with goodly tymbre for the walles: yee they make greate haist with the worke, a helpe one another, and it goeth forth prosperously in their handes, and with greate diligence a worshipe is it made. Then axed we the elders, who had cemaunded them to make rp the house and the buyldinge: and this we dyd, to 8 intert that we might certifie the perfectly, and wryte vito the, the names of those $\frac{t}{y}$ were $y$ rulers of the worke. So they gave is this answere: we are the seruauntes of the LORDE. which made heaten and earth: $\tau$ as for this house, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ it hath bene buylded and set xp afore tyme by the greate and mightie kynge of Israel. But whan oure fathers prouoked God vnto wrath, a symed agaynst the God of lsrael, ${ }^{b}$ he gaue the oner in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon the kynge of the Caldees, which brake downe y house and bret it, and caried awaye the people presoners vnto Babilon.

Neuertheles, in the first yeare that kynge Cyrus reigned at Babilon.c Cyrus the kynge wrote and commaunded to buylde op this house agayne: and all the ormamentes that Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Ierusalem vito Babilon, and appropriated unto his owne temple: those brought Cyrus forth agayne, and delyuered them to Zorobabel a to Sahmanar the indershreue, commaundynge them, $y^{t}$ they shulde brynge those same ornamentes agayne to lerusale in to $\hat{y}$ téple, $\tau$ to begynne from $\stackrel{+}{y}$ tyme forth, to buylde the teple agayne in his owne place. The Salmanasar layed the foundacion of $y$ LORDES [^814]house at Ierusalem, and euer sence haue they buylded, a yet is it not ended. And therfore ( O kynge) yf thou thynkest it good, let it be sought in the Lybraries a rolles of kynge Cyrus: yf it be founde the, that it is done with the comeell and cossent of kynge Cyrus, and yf oure lorde y kynge be so mynded, let him wryte vinto vs therof.

Then comaunted kinge Darius, to seke in the Lybraries: ${ }^{d}$ and so at Egbathanis in a litle cite in Media there was founde soch a wrytinge: In the first yeare of the raigne of Cyrus, the same kynge Cyrus cōmaunded, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ the house of the LORDE at lerusalem shulde be buylded agayne ( 5 odoures to be made there contynually vnto the LORDE) whose heyth shalbe ten cubites, $\mathfrak{y}$ bredth Ix. cubites $\tau$ iiij. square with thre hewen stones, with a lofte of tymbre of the sane countre, yee with a new loft, $\pi$ the expenses therof to be geuen of $y$ house of kynge Cyrus. And the ornameites of golde as syluer, $\frac{t}{y}$ Nabuchodonosor toke out of the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, shalbe set agayne in the temple at lerusale, where they were afore. Sysemnes also the vadershreue in Syria and Phenices, f prynces and their companyons, and the other $\stackrel{t}{y}$ be head rulers in Syria and Phenices, shall not medle ner haue eny thinge to do with that place.

1 Cyrus have comaunded also, that they shal buylde the house of the LORDE whole Ip: a haue ordeyned them, to helpe those ${ }^{t}$. be come out of captiuyte, tyll the house of the LORDE be fymished: a out of the trybute and taxinge that is yearly raysed up in Syria and Phenices, diligently to geue them a certayne summe, to the offerynge of the LORDE: and the same to be delyuered unto Zorobabel the officer: that he therwithall maye ordeyne oxen, rammes, lambes, t corne, salt, wye and oyle, and that contynually euery yeare: after the expences which the prestes that be at Ierusalem, shew to be made daylie: ${ }^{e}$ this shalbe genen voto them without delaye, that they maye offer sacrifices daylie to the hyest God, for the kynge and for his seruauntes, and to praye for their lyues. Let it be proclamed also on enery syde, that who so euer breaketh or despyseth this comaundement of $\hat{y}$ kynge, shalbe hanged vpon a galow (made of his owne good) a all his goodes shalbe seasoned vito $\dot{y}$ kynge. The LORDE therfore (whose name is there called vpon) rote out and destroye all $\dot{y}$ kynges and people, that vndertake by violence to hynder the same, or to deale vneurteously with the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem. 1 Darius the kinge hate ordeynerl, that these thinges shalbe done with all diligence.

TIIEN Sysennes y vndershreue in Celosyria and Pheniees, and the other landlordes with their companyons, obeyed the thinges that kynge Darius had ordened, were diligent in the holy workes, a were felow helpers with the olde rulers of the lewes. And so the worke of the Sanetuary wente forth and prospered, whan Aggeus and Zachary prophecied. And they perfourmed all thinges thorow the commaundement of the LORDE God of Israel, and atter the deuyee of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerses kynges of Persia.
And thus was oure house fynished, wnto the xxiij. daye of the moneth Addar in $\hat{y}$ vj. yeare of kynge Darius. And the children of Israel the prestes © the Leuites, © the other that were come out of captiuyte, $\pi$ soch as were ioyned vnto them, dyd acordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses. And in the dedieacion of the temple they offred an humdreth oxen, an C. rammes, iiij. C. lambes, a xij. goates for the synnes of all the people of Israel, after ŷ nombre of the trybes of Israel. The prestes also $\mathbb{T}$ the Leuites stode arayed in the prestly garmētes, after $\dot{y}$ trybes, ouer all $\hat{y}$ workes of the LORDE God of 1srael, acordinge to $\dot{y}$ boke of Moses, and the porters by all the dores.

And the children of lsrael (with those $\frac{t}{\mathrm{t}}$ were come out of eaptiuyte) helde the Passeouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth, whan the prestes and the Leuites were sanetificd. They that came out of eaptiuyte, were not all sanetified together: but the Leuites were all sanetified together. And so all they that eame out of eaptiuyte, kylled the easter lambe, for their brethre, for the prestes a for them selues. And the childrē of Israel $\dot{y}$ y came out of eaptiuyte, r escaped frō all $\dot{y}$ abhominacions of the Heithé, sought the LORDE, and kepte the feast of vnleuended bred vij. daies longe, eatinge a drynkynge a were mery before the LORDE: ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ the LORDE had turned the denyee of the kynge of $A$ siria, $\tau$ comforted their handes to the workes of $y$ I ORDE God of lsrael.

AND after him, whan Artaxerses the kynge of $\mathfrak{y}$ l'ersiās raigned, ${ }^{a}$ there wēte noto him Eszdras the some of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, the some of Helchia, $\dot{y}$ somie of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoc, $\dot{y}$ sonne of Achitob, the some of Amarias, $\dot{y}$ sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Boceus, $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ sonne of Abisu, $y$ some of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, " ${ }^{\circ}$ sonne of Aaron ${ }^{\circ}$ first prest. This Eszdras wēte up from Babilon (for he had good molerstondinge in $\dot{y}$ lawe of Moses, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ was geue of the LORDE God of Israel, to be taught $\underline{x}$ done in dede.) And $\hat{y}$ kinge fanoured him, I dyd him greate worshipe and honoure, after all his desyres. There wente vp with him also certayne of $\dot{y}$ children of Israel, of the prestes, of $\dot{y}$ Leuites, of the syngers, porters, and mynisters of y temple at Ierusalem.

In the rij. yeare of the raigne of kynge Artaxerses, in the v. moneth, $\frac{y}{}$ is in the vij. yeare of the raigne, they wente from Babilon in the newmoone of the v . moneth, it eame the hye waye to Iernsale alter his commaundement, like as the LORDE had prospered their iourney. For in these Eszdras gat greate instruccion, $\frac{t}{y}$ he shulde leane none of ẙ thinges behynde, which were in ${ }^{\circ}$ lawe a eömaundementes of God. And he taught whole Israel all righteousnes a iudgment.

Then came the Secretaries of kynge Artaxerses, a delyuered y wrytinges ( y were eome frō Artaxerses the kynge) to Eszdras the prest $t$ reder of the lawe of the LORDE: And this is $\hat{y}$ eopye of $\hat{y}$ letter: Kynge Artaxerses sendeth his gretinge vito Eszdras the prest a reder of the lawe of $\frac{8}{y}$ LORDE: Of frendshipe a good will I haue ordeyned and charged, yf there be eny of the lewes, of $\dot{y}$ prestes $\tau$ Leuites in my realme, which desyreth $\tau$ is contēt to go with the vnto Ierusale, ${ }^{t}$ he maye do it. Therfore yf eny be mynded to beare the eopany, let the come together, a go with the (like as 1 am contét a my vij. frendes my coūcelers:) to se what they do at lerusalẽ © in lewry, ธ kepe y thinges acord-

Tinge as thou hast in 8 lawe of the LORDE:
3 I to briuge the giftes vito God the LORDE of Istael, $y$ I t my frendes hauc promysed to lernsale, $\pi$ all the syluer a gotle $\dot{y}$ is in $\hat{y}$ conntre of Babilon, vato y LORDE to Icrusalē, with the thinge $y \frac{1}{y}$ is gevé for the people in the LORDES temple at Ierusalem: Yee that the same syluer it golde maye be gathered, and oxen, rammes, shepe © goates and other that beloge to these thinges: and that they maye offer sacrifices vnto the LORDE, ypon the aulter of their LORDE, which is at Ierusalem.

And what so euer thou a thy brethre wyl do with the syluer a golde, $\frac{t}{y}$ do after $\dot{y}$ inynde, $a$ after the comanndement of the LORDE thy God: like wyse with all the holy vessels, $\frac{1}{y}$ are gene the for the seruyce of the house of the LORDE thy God: s other thinges what soener is necessary for the to the worke of the temple, ${ }^{t}$ shalbe gene the of the kynges treasure: a loke what thou with thy brethre wilt do with the golde and syluer, that do after $\hat{y}$ wil of the LORDE. And I kynge Artaxerses haue commaunded the kepers of $j$ treasures in Syria and Phenices, that what soeuer Eszdras the prest and reder of the lawe of the LORDE doth wryte, it shalbe geuen him : tyll an C. talentes of syluer, and of golde in lyke maner: Of corne also an C. measures, and tyll an hūdreth vessels of wyne, and other plenteous thinges without nombre. Let all thinges be done after the lawe of $\hat{y}$ hyest God, that the wrath of God aryse not in the realme of the kynge and of his sonnes. I commaunde you also, that ye requyre no taxinge ner tribute of the prestes, Lenites, syngers, and mynisters of the temple, ner of the wryters: and that no man haue auctorite to medle eny thinge against them. As for the (O Eszdras) set thou iudges and arbitrers in the whole lande of Syria and Phenices, after the wyszdome of God: and lerne all soch as are ignoramnt in the lawe of God thy LORDE, and let all them that offende agaynst the lawe, be punyshed: whether it be with death, with payne, to be condemned in money, or to be banyshed.

Then sayde Eszdras $\mathfrak{y}$ wryter: Blessed be y God of oure fathers, that hath geuen so grood a mynde and wyll in to the hert of the kynge, to magnifie his house ${ }^{t}$ is at Ieru-salem, and hath made me to be accepted in the sight of $\hat{y}$ kynge, of his councell, of his frēdes and of his nobles. And so I was stedfast in my mynde, acordinge as the LORDE my God helped me, and I chose out men of Isracl, to go vp with me. And these are the heades ${ }^{a}$ (after their kynreds © houses of their fathers) that wente up with me from Babilon, out of the kyngdome of Artaxerses: Of the sonnes of Phares, Gersonius. Of $\mathfrak{y}$ somes of Siemarith, Amenus. Of the somnes of Dauid, Accus, the some of Cecilia.

Of the somnes of Phares, Zachary: and with him there turned agayne an hundreth and fiftie men. Of the sonnes of the captayne of Moabilon, Zaraei, and with him ij. C. and 1. men. Of the sonnes of Zachnes, Iechonias Zecholi, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the somes of Salamaasias, Gotholie, and Ixx. with him. Of the sonnes of Zaphacia, Zarias Miheli, and with him lxxx. Of the sonnes of Iob, Abdias Ieheli, and with him ij. C. and xij. men. Of the sonnes of Bania, Salimoth the somne of Iosaphia, and with him an C. and Ix. men. Of the sonnes of Beer, Zachary Bebei, and with him ij. C. and viij. mol. Of the sonnes of Esead, Iohannes Ezechan, and with him Cx. men. Of the sonnes of Adonica those that were the last, and these are their names: Eliphalam $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ sonne of Gebel and Semeias, © with him lxx. men. All these called I together by the water Thia, where we pitched oure tentes thre daycs, and there I mustered them.
${ }^{3} \mathrm{As}$ for the sonnes of the prestes and Leuites, I founde none there. Then sent I vnto Eleazar, a Eccelom, and Masman, a Malobam, and Enaathan, and Samea, and Ioribimathan, Eunagan, Zachary, Mosollamū (these were the leders and men of experiēce) © I sent them worde, that they shulde come vnto Loddeus, which was by the place of the treasury, a commaunded them that they shulde speake vnto Loddeus and to his brethren © to those that were in the treasury, to sende vs soch mé, as might execute the prestes office in the house of the LORDE ourc God. And with the mightie hāde of ourc LORDE God, they brought vnto vs mé of good experience, from amōge the sonnes of Moolius, the sonne of Leui, $\hat{y}$ sonne of Israel, Sebebeiam © the sonnes © his brethree Aszbin
(a) Anim, of whom there were xviij. From amoge the children of the sonnes of Cananeus, (a) their somnes were xx . men. And of them yt serued in the temple, whom Danid had ordeyned, and the pryneipall men that ministred for the worke vnto the Leuites in the temple, ij. C. and xx. men: whose names are all tokened vp in wrytinge.
Then commaunded I a fastrnge vito $\mathfrak{y}$ yonge men before the LORDE,$^{a}{ }^{9} \dot{y}$ I might desyre of him a prosperous iourney a a good waye for vs, yee for vs, for oure children and for the catell, because of the layenges awayte: a I durst not require of the kynge men of horse a fote, to conveye vs safely agaynst oure enemies, for we had sayde vnto the kynge, that y power of the LORDE oure God shulde be with them, that seke him with their whole hert. And therfore we besought God oure LORDE earnestly because of these thinges, and he was mercifull wnto vs, and herde oure prayer. And I separated from amonge $\dot{y}$ rulers of the people, a from $\mathfrak{y}$ prestes of $\dot{y}$ temple xij. men, a Sebeia a Asania, © ten men of their brethren with them. And I weied the the golde the syluer a all the prestly ornamētes of the house of oure God, whieh the kynge a his councell, a his prynces a whole Israel had genē. And whan I had weyed it, I gaue the an Cl. talētes in syluer, an C. talentes of syluer vessell, an C. talentes of golde, ç of goldè vessell seuē tymes twentie, and vessels of other metall (yee of good metall) xij. glisteringe as the golde, $\pi$ saide rnto the: ye also are holy rnto the LORDE, at the vessels are holy, ot the golde os the syluer is promised suto the LORDE the God of oure fathers. Be diligent now a kepe it, vntill the tyme $\frac{t}{y}$ ye delyuer it to the rulers of the people, to $\dot{y}$ prestes, to the Leuites a to $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ pryncipall mē of the cities of Israel in lerusalem, a in the chambre of the house of oure God.

So y prestes $x$ the Leuites which receaued of me the golde, ${ }^{b}$ the syluer ts the vessell, brought it to Ierusale in to the tēple of the LORDE. And from Thia we brake vp the xij. daye of the first moneth, tyll we came to Ierusale. And whan the thirde daye was past, the weyed golde a syluer was delynered in $y$ house of the LORDE the fourth daye, vnto Marimoth the sonne of Ior the prest, a with him was Eleazar $\dot{y}$ sonne of Phineas, and with the were losabdus $\hat{y}$ sonne of lesnet, Medias $\pi$ the sonne of Banus, $\pi$ certayne of the Leuites to the nombre $\pi$ to the waighte: a the waight of them was writte $\mathrm{v} p$ the same tyme. As for those that were come out of captinyte, they offred sacrifice vato the LORDE the God of Israel : eue xij. oxen for all Israel, lxxxvj. rammes, lxxij. shepe, xij. goates for symne, xij. kyne for a thankofferinge, all to the sacrifice of the LORDE. And y kinges comission delyuered they unto $\dot{y}$ stewardes and debytes of the kynge, and to the vndershreues in Celosyria and Phenices.
${ }^{c}$ Now whan these thinges were done, the rulers came vato me, and sayde: The generacion of lsrael, the prynces, $\mathfrak{y}$ prestes and Leuites, the straunge people and indwellers of the londe, haue not put awaye their vnclennesse, from the Cananites, Hethites, Pheresites, from the Moabites, Egipeians $\pi$ Edomites. For both they and their sonnes haue mengled them selues with the danghters of them, $\pi$ the holy sede is mixte with the outlandish Heithen, a sens the begynnynge of their raigne haue the rulers and heades bene partakers of their wickednesse.

As soone as I had herde these thinges, immediatly I rent my holy garmentes, and pulled out $\dot{y}$ hayre of my heade a my beerd, a sat me downe soroufull $\pi$ heuy. So all they that were moued thorow the worde of the God of Israel, came vnto me: and I sat still full of heuines vntill the euenynge sacrifice. Then stode 1 vp frö fastinge, hauynge rente clothes at the holy garmét, kneled downe vpon my knees, helde out my haides vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDÉ, a sayde: O LORDE, I am confounder $\tau$ ashamed before thy face, for oure symnes are become many ypon oure heades, $\pi$ oure wickednesses are exalted monto the heaue: for sens y tyme of oure fathers we are in greate simne into this daye. And for the symmes of vs a oure fathers, we with oure brethren $\pi$ with oure prestes hane bene deliuered mito the kinges of the earth, in to the swerde, a in to eaptinite, $\pi$ became a spoyle with confucion $\pi$ shame vnto this daie. And now O LORDE God, how greate is the mercy $\dot{t}^{\frac{t}{2}}$ we have gotte of the? in $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thou hast left vs a rote a a name in the place of thy Sanctuary, to discouer oure light in the house of $\begin{gathered}\text { a LORDE } \\ \text { Loure God } 1 \text { geuē rs }\end{gathered}$ meate at all tymes of our ministracion. And now O LORDE, what shall we sare, hauynge all these thinges in possession? For we haue broken thy cōmaundementes, which thou gauest vnto vs by the handes of thy seruauntes the prophetes, sayenge: The londe $\frac{t}{y}$ ye go wnto, तt $\frac{t}{y}$ is geuen you for an heretage to haue in possession, is defyled with the melemes r fylthynes of the Heithen, a with their abhominacion haue they poluted it alltogether. Therfore shal ye not ioyne ${ }^{4}$ youre daughters vnto their somnes, ner mary youre sonnes vnto their daughters: Morouer, ye shall neuer seke to make peace with them, ${ }^{\frac{1}{y}}$ ye maye increase t eate the best in the lande, a $\dot{+}$ ye maye deuyde $\hat{y}$ inheritaunce of the lande vnto youre children for euermore. As for the thinge $\dot{y}$ now happeneth wnto vs , it commeth all for oure wicked workes and greate symnes. yet hast thon geuen vs soeh a rote, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ we are come againe in to oure owne londe : and we are so wicked, $\frac{t}{y}$ we haue brokē thy statutes Tt comaundementes agayne, a mengled oure selues with the rnclènes of the outlandish Heithen. O LORDE, art thou angrie with rs? wilt thou rote vs eleane out? 't oure rote $\uparrow$ name remayne nomore? O LOLDE God of Israel, thou art true, for oure rote endureth yet suto this present daye. And beholde, now are we before $y$ in oure symes, now ean we not stonde before the in them.
And whan Eszdras with this prayer had knowleged the symue, wepinge, ${ }^{\text {® }}$ lyège flatt rpon the grounde before the teple, there gathered vnto him fron Ierusalem a greate multitude of men a wemen, of yonge men a maydens, for there was a vert greate wepinge and mournynge in the cōgregacion. so whan Iechonias the some leheli one of the children of Israel cried, he sayde wnto Eszdras: we haue syned agarnst the LORDE, because we haue maried outlandish women of the Heithe. Now art thou ouer all Israel.

| We wil sweare an ooth therfore unto $\hat{y} \mid$ LORDE, $\dot{y}$ we shal put awaye all oure wrues which we haue takē of the Heithē, with their childre: like as it is appoynted the by oure fore elders. Stonde ip then, open thou it and declare it playnely vnto vs acordige to the lawe of $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE: for the matter belongeth vito $\dot{y}$, r we wyll helpe the, quyte thy self manly. So Eszdras arose, and toke an ooth of the rulers of $\dot{y}$ prestes $\mathbb{c}$ of $\dot{y}$ Leuites © of all Isracl, to do after these thinges, and they sware.

THEN Eszdras stode up from the courte of the teple without, ${ }^{\tau} \tau$ wente in to the chāber of Ionathas the sonne of Nasabus, a remayned there, $\mathbb{\imath}$ ate no meate ner dronke drynke, for the multitude of the wickednes of the people. And there was made a proclamacion in all lewry a at Ierusalem, for alt soch as were gathered at lerusalé out of captinyte, $\dot{y}$ who so eucr came not to Ierusalé within two or thre dayes (acordinge to the iudgment of the olde lordes of councell) his goodes shulde be taken from him, a he excluded from the cogregacion of the captiugte. And in thre dayes were all they of the trybe of Iuda $\pi$ Ben lamin gathered together at lerusalen, the xx. daye of $\dot{y}$ ix. moneth. And y whole multitude sat trēblinge in the courte of the temple, for it was wynter. So Eszdras arose vp, I sayde mino them: ye haue done varighteously; in that ye haue taken outlandish wyues to mariage, a so to increase the symnes of Israel. And now knowlege the same, $\frac{1}{}$ geue prayse nnto the LORDE God of oure fathers. © perfourne his wil, departinge from the Heithen of the londe, a from the outlandih wrues. Then cried the whole multitude with loude voyce, « sayde: like as thou hast spokē. so wil we do: But for so moch as the people are many, © f wynter here, we maie not stōde without $y$ house: agayne, this worke is not a thinge, $y$ can be frnished in a daye or two, for we be many y haue smned in these thinges: Ordene therfore, $\dot{y}$ the rulers of the multitude and all they that dwell with vs , and as many as haue outlandish wyues. the prestes also and iudges of euery place, maye stonde in the tyme appoynted. tyll ther ( $\rightarrow$ ME seconde boke of y prophet Eszdras: ${ }^{a}$ ( $y$ sonne of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Helchia, $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoc, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amerias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Maraioth, the sonne of Sarahias, the sonne of Vzi, the sonne of Boccus, the sonne of Abisu, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, the some of Aaron, of the trybe of Leui) which was presoner in the lande of the Meedes, in the raigne of Artaxerses kynge of Persia.

And the worde of the LORDE came vito me, sayenge: ${ }^{b}$ Go thy waye $₫$ shew my people their synfull dedes, th their children their wickednesses, which they haue done against me, that they maye tell their childers childre the same: for the synnes of their fathers are increased in them. And why? they have forgotten me, © haue offred vnto straunge goddes. Am not I euen he, that brought them out of the lande of Egipte, from the house of bondage? But they haue prouoked me vnto wrath, a despysed my councels. Pull thou out then the hayre of thy heade, and cast all euell ouer them, for they haue not bene obedient vnto my lawe.

It is a people without lernynge a nourtoure. How longe shal I forbeare them, vnto whom I have done so moch good? Many kynges haue I destroyed for their sakes: ${ }^{c}$ Pharao with his seruautes and all his power hane I smytten downe and slayne: ${ }^{d}$ All $\dot{y}$ nacions have 1 destroyed and roted out before them, and in y east have I brought two landes and people to naught, euen Tyre a Sydon, and haue slasne all their enemies. Speake thou therfore vnto them, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE: ${ }^{e}$ I led you thorow the see, and haue geuen you sure stretes sence the begynnynge. I gave you Moses to be youre captayne, and Aaron to be the prest: $f$ I gaue you light in a piler of fyre, a greate woders haue I done amöge you: yet haue ye forgotten me, sayeth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the allmightie LORDE: I ggane you quales to eate, and tentes for youre sucoure: Neuertheles ye murmured, and [^815]ascrybed not y victory of youre enemies vnto my name: yee this same daie do ye yet murmoure. Where are the benefites, that I haue done for you? Whan ye were hongrie in the nwildernes, dyd ye not crie vnto me: Why hast thou brought vs in to this wildernes, to kill vs? It had bene better for vs, to haue serned $\dot{y}$ Egipcians, then to dye in this wildernesse. Thee had l pitie vpon youre mourninges, and gane you Manna to eate. Ye ate angels foode. Whā ye were thyrstie, dyd not ${ }^{\text {I }}$ I hew $\mathfrak{y}$ hardstone, a caused water ynough to flowe thereout? For the heate, 1 couered you with $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ leaues of the trees. A good pleasaunt fatt londe gave I you: 1 cast out the Cananites, the Pheresites and Philistynes before you. What shal I do more for you, saieth the LORDE?

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: ${ }^{k}$ Whan ye were in the wildernes, in the water of the Amorites, beynge a thyrst a blasphemynge my name, I gaue you not fyre for youre blasphemies, but cast a tre in to $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ water, and made the ryuer swete. What shall I do vato the, O Iacob? Thou Iuda woldest not obeye me. 'I wil turne me to another people, a wnto those will I geue my name, that they maye kepe my statutes. Seinge ye haue forsakē me, I wil forsake you also. Whan ye desyre me to be gracious vnto you, 1 shal haue no mercy vpon you. ${ }^{m}$ Whan ye call vpō me, I wil not heare you. For ye haue defyled youre hādes with bloude, and youre fete are swift to commytt manslaughter. Ye haue not forsaken me (in a maner) but youre owne selues, sayeth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: haue I not prayed you, as a father his sonnes, as a mother hir danghters, and as a norsse hir yonge babes, that ye wolde be my people, and 1 shulde be youre God: that ye wolde be my children, and I shulde be youre owne father? "I gathered you together, as an henne gathereth hir chekens vnder hir wynges. But now what shal I do vnto you? I shal cast you out fro my face. ${ }^{\circ}$ Whan ye offre vnto me, I shal turne my face from you: for your solempne feast dayes, youre new moones and youre circumcisions have I forsaken. I sent wnto you my seruauntes the prophetes, ff Thus sayeth the Alhnightie LORDE: youre house must be desolate. I wil cast you out as the wynde doth y strawe : youre children shal not be frutefull, for they haue despysed my commaundement, and done $\dot{y}$ thinge $\frac{t}{y}$ is euell before me. Youre houses wil 1 geue vnto a people $\dot{y}$ shal come, and athey $\dot{y}$ neuer herde me, shal beleue in me: T they moto who 1 neuer shewed token, shal do the thinge ${ }^{t}$ I comaunde thē. They have sene no prophetes, yet shal they call their symes to remembraunce, and knowlege thē. ir reporte me vito the grace, that I wil do for the people which is to come, whose children reioyse in gladnes: a though they haue not sene me with bodely eyes, yet in sprete they beleue the thinge that I saye. And now brother, beholde what greate ${ }^{b}$ worshipe, and se $y$ people that commeth from the east, vnto whom I wyll geue the dukedome of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, of Oseas, Amos, and Micheas, of Ioel, Abdy, Ionas, Naum and Abacuc, of Sophony, Aggeus, Zachary and Malachy, which is called also an angel (or messanger) of the LORDE.

TMUSS sayeth the LORDE: 1 brought this people out of bondage, I gaue thē my cōmaundementes by my seruaūtes $\hat{y}$ prophetes, whom they wolde not heare, but despysed my coücels. The mother that bare them, sayeth vnto them: Go youre waye ye children, for I am a wyddow a forsaken: I brought you vp with gladnesse, but with sorow and heuynes haue I lost you: for ye haue synned before the LORDE youre God, and done $\hat{y}$ thinge that is euell before him. But what shall I now do vnto you? I am a wyddow and forsakè: go youre waye (o my children) and axe merey of the LORDE. As for me O father, I call vpon the for a wytnesse ouer the mother of these childre, which wolde not kepe my couenaunt: $\frac{t}{y}$ thou brynge them to cofucion, and their mother to a spoyle, that she beare no more. Let their names be seatred abrode amonge the Heithen, let them be put out of the earth, for they haue thought scorne of my couenaunt.

Wo be vito the Assur, thou that hydest 13 the varighteous by the. Thou wicked people, remembre what I dyd vnto 'Sodom and Gomorre, whose land is turned to pitch and aszshes. Euen so also wyll I do vnto all them, that heare me not, sayeth the Allmightie LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE unto Eszdras: Tell my people, $\frac{t}{y}$ I will geue them the kyngdome of Ierusalem, which I wolde haue geuen vnto Israel. Their glory also wyl I take vito me, and geue them the euerlastynge tabernaeles, which I had prepared for those.

The tre of life shalbe vnto them a swete smellynge oyntment: they shal nether laboure ner be weery. Go ye youre waye, of ye shall receaue it. Praye for youre selues a few dayes, that they maye dwell therin. Now is the kingdome prepared for you, therfore watch. Take heaue and earth to wytnesse, for I haue broken the euell in peces, and created the good, for I lyue sayeth y LORDE. Mother enbrace thy children, and brynge them vp with gladnes: make their fete as fast as a piler, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE.

And those that be deed wyll I rayse vp agayne from their places, and brynge them out of $\dot{y}$ graues, for 1 haue knowne my name in Israel. Feare not thou mother of the children, for 1 haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE. And for thy helpe I shal sende the my seruauntes Esay and leremy, after whose councell I haue sanctified a prepared for the, xij. trees with dyuerse frutes, and as many welles flowinge with mylek and hony, a seuen mountaynes, whervpō there growe roses and lilies, wherin I wyl fyll my children with ioye. Execute iustice for the wyddowe, be iudge for the fatherlesse : geue to $\dot{y}$ poore: defende the cofortlesse: clothe the naked: heale the wounded and sick: laugh not a lame man to scorne: defende the crepell, and let the blinde come in to $\frac{y}{y}$ sight of my clearnes. Kepe the olde a yonge within thy walles: ${ }^{d}$ where so euer thou fyndest the deed, toke them, and burye them, and I shal gene the the first place in iny resurreccion. Holde styll (O my people) and take thy rest, for thy quyetnes is come. Fede thy children O thou good norsse, stablish their fete: As for the seruauntes whom I have geuen the, there

For whan the daye of trouble and heuynes commeth, other shal wepe and be soroufull, but thou shalt be mery and plenteous. The Heithen shalbe gelous, but they shalbe able to do nothinge agaynst the, sayeth the LORDE. My handes shal eouer the, so that thy children shal not se the fyre euerlastinge. Be ioyfull O thou mother with thy childre, for I wyll delyuer the, sayeth the LORDE. Remembre thy deed childre, for I shal brynge them out of the earth, and shew mercy mito them, for I am mercifull, sayeth the LORDE Allmightie.

Enbrace thy childrē, vntyll I come and shew mercy vnto them, for my welles runne 玉 5 ouer, and my grace shal not fayle. I Eszdras receaued a charge of the LORDE vpon the mount Oreb, that I shulde go vnto Israel. But whan I came wnto thē, they set me at naught, and despysed the commaundement of y LORDE. And therfore I saye vnto you O ye Heithen, that heare and vnderstonde: Loke for youre shepherde, he shal geue you euerlastinge rest: for he is nye at hande, that shal come in the ende of the worlde. Be ready to the rewarde of the kyngdome, for the euerlastinge light shall shyne vpon you for euermore. Fle the shadowe of this worlde, receaue the ioyfulnes of youre glory. I testifie my sauioure openly: $O$ receaue the gift $\frac{t}{y}$ is geuen you, and be glad, geuynge thankes vnto him, that hath called you to the heauenly kyngdome. Aryse yp, and stonde fast: beholde the nombre of those that be sealed in the feast of the LORDE, which are departed from the shadowe of the worlde, and haue receaued glorious garmétes of the LORDE. Take thy nombre O Sion, and shutt vp thy purified, which haue fulfilled the lawe of the LORDE. The nombre of thy children whom thou longedest for, is fulfilled: beseke the power of the LORDE, that thy people which haue bene called from the begynnynge, maye be halowed.
I Eszdras sawe vpon the mount Sion a greate people, whom I coude not "nombre, त they all praysed the LORDE with songes of thankesgeuynge. And in the myddest of the there was a yonge mã of an hye stature, more excellent then all they, and vpon euery one of their heades he sett a crowne, and was euer hygher and hygher, which I marueled at greatly. So I axed ẙ angell, & sayde: Syr, what are these? He answered and sayde mito me: These be they, that hane put of the mortall clothinge and put on the immortall, and haue testified a knowleged the name of God. Now are they crowned, and receave the rewarde.

Then sayde I unto the angell: what yonge personne is it, that crowneth them, a geueth them the palmes in their handes? So he answered and sayde unto me: It is $\hat{y}$ sonne of God, whom they haue knowleged in the worlde. Then beganne I greatly to commende them, that stode so stifly for the name of the LORDE. And so the angell sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and tell my people, what maner of thinges and how greate wonders of the LORDE thy God, thou hast sene.

$\mathbb{U f s}$ iij. $\mathbb{C l}$ yapter.

IN the thirtie yeare of the fall of the cite, I was at Babilon a laye troubled rpō my bed, a my thoughtes came rp ouer my hert: for I sawe y desolacion of Sion, a the plenteous wealth of them $\frac{\mathrm{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ dwelt at Babilon: § my sprete was sore moued, so that I begāne to speake fearfull wordes to the most hyest, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou spakest at the begynnynge, whan thou plantedst y earth, (and that thy self alone) and gauest commaundement vito $\mathfrak{y}$ people, and a body unto Adam, ${ }^{6}$ which was a creature of thy handes, and hast brethed in him the breth of life: and so he lyued before the, and thou leddest him in to paradyse, which garde of pleasure thy right hande had planted, or euer the earth was made. And vnto him thou gauest commaundemèt to loue $\dot{y}$ waye, which he transgressed, $\pi$ immediatly thou appoyntedest death in him, and in his generacions. Of him came nacions, trybes, people, a kynreddes out of nombre. ${ }^{\text {ch}}$ And euery people walked after their owne wil, and did nyce thinges before the: and as for thy commaundementes, they despysed them.
${ }^{d}$ But in processe of tyme thou broughtest the water floude, apon those that dwelt in the worlde, and destroydest them. And like as the death was in Adam, so was the water floude also in these. Nenertheles one of them thou leftest: namely, Noe with his housholde, of whom come all righteous mē. And it happened that, whan they $\frac{t}{y}$ dwelt vpon the earth, beganne to multiplie, and had gotten many children, and were a greate people, they begame to be more mgodly then the first.

Now whan they all lyued so wickedly before the, ${ }^{a}$ thou didest chose the a man from amonge them, whose name was Abram. Him thou louedest, and unto him only thou shewdest thy wyll, and maydest an euerlastinge conenaunt with him, promisinge him, that thou woldest neuer forsake his sede. ${ }^{b}$ And vato him thou gauest Isaac, vnto Isaac also thou gauest Iacob and Esau. As for Iacob thou didest chose him, and put backe Esau. And so Iacob beeame a greate multitude. And it happened that whā thou leddest his sede out of Egipte, thou broughtest the ip to the mount Sion, ' bowinge downe the heauens, settinge fast the earth, mouynge the gromide, makynge the depthes to shake, and troublynge the worlde: And thy glory wente thorow foure portes of fyre, and earth quakes, and wyndes and colde: that thou mightest geue the lawe vnto the sede of Iacob, and diligence wnto the generaciō of Israel.

And yet tokest thou not awaye from the that wicked hert, that thy lawe might brynge forth frute in them. For the first Adam bare a wicked hert, transgressed, and was ouercome, and so be all they $\frac{t}{y}$ are borne of him. ${ }^{d}$ Thus remayned weaknes with the lawe in the hert of the people, with the wickednesse of the rote: so that the good departed awaye, and the euell abode still. So the tymes passed awaye, and the yeares were brought to an ende. ' Then didest thou rayse the p a seruaunt called Dauid, whom thou commaundedst to buylde a cite vnto thy name, and to offre ip incense and sacrifice vnto the therin. This was done now many yeares.

Then the inhabiters of the cite forsoke the, and in all thinges dyd euē as Adam and all his generacions had done: for they also had a wicked hert. And so thou ganest thy cite oner in to the handes of thine enemies. Are they of Babilon then better and more righteous then thy people, $\frac{t}{y}$ they shal therfore haue the domynion of Sion? For whan I came [^818]there, and sawe their vngodlynes, and so greate wickednesse, that it coude not be nōbred: yee whan my soule sawe so many euell doers (in $\mathfrak{y}$ xxx. yeare) my hert fayled me, for I sawe, how thou suffrest them in soch vngodlynes, and sparest $\hat{y}$ wicked doers: but thine owne people hast thou roted out, and preserued thine enemies, © this hast thou not shewed me.

I cannot perceaue how this happeneth. Do it they of Babilon then better, then they of Sion? Or is there eny other people, $\frac{t}{}$ knoweth the, sauynge the people of Israel? Or what generacion hath so beleued $\dot{y}$ couenaūtes, as Iacob? And yet their rewarde appeareth not, and their laboure hath no frute. For I haue gone here and there thorow the Heithé, $\mathbb{C}$ I se, $\frac{t}{y}$ they be rych © wealthy, © thynke not vpon f commaundementes. Weye thou therfore oure wickednesse now in y balaunce, and theirs also that dwell in the worlde, and so shal thy name be no where founde but in Israel. Or where is there a people vpon earth, $\frac{t}{y}$ hath not synned before the? Or what people hath so kepte thy commaundementes? Thou shalt fynde, that Israel by name hath kepte thy preceptes, but not the other people and Heithen.

AND the angell that was sent unto me (whose name was Vriel) gaue me answere, and sayde: Thy hert hath takē to moch ypon it in this worlde, and thou thinkest to comprehende the waye of the Hyest. Then sayde I: yee my lorde. And he answered me, and sayde: I am sent to shewe the thre wayes, and to sett forth thre symilitudes before the: wherof yf thou canst declare me one, I wil shewe the also the waye, that thon desyrest to se, and I shal shewe the from wheece the wicked hert commeth. And I sayde: tell on my LORDE. Then sayde he vnto me: Go thy waye, weye me the weight of the fyre, or measure me the blast of the wynde, or call me agayne the daye that is past. Then answered I and sayde: What man borne is able to do that? Why requyrest thou soch of me? And he sayde snto me: Yf I shulde axe the, how depe dwellinges are in the see? Or how greate water springes are vpon $\dot{y}$ firmamēt? Or how greate water sprynges are in the begynnynge of the depe? Or which are the outgoinges of Paradise? Peraduéture thou woldest saye vnto me: I neuer wente downe yet in to $\dot{y}$ depe ner hell, nether dyd I euer clymme vp in to heauen. Neuertheles now haue I axed the but onely of fyre and wynde and of the daye, where thorow thou hast trauayled, and from the which thou canst not be scparated: and yet canst thou geue me no answere of them.

He sayde morouer vnto me: Thine owne thinges, and soch as are growne vp with $\dot{y}$, canst thou not knowe: how shulde thy vessel then be able to coprehende the waye of the Hyest, and now outwardly in the corrupte worlde, to vnderstöde the corrupcion $\dot{y}^{\dot{t}}$ is euydent in my sight? The sayde I vnto him: It were better that we were not at all, the that we shulde lyue in wickednesse, and to suffre, and not to knowe wherfore. He answered me, and sayde: I wēte in a wod, and the trees toke soch a deuyce and sayde: ${ }^{a}$ Come let vs go, and fight agaynst the see, that it maye departe awaye before vs, and that we maye make vs yet more woddes.

The floudes of the see also in lyke maner toke this deuyce, and sayde: Come, let vs go vp , and fight agaynst the trees of the wodd, that we maye make our londe the wyder. The thought and deuyce of the wodd was but vayne and nothinge worth, for the fyre came, and consumed the wod: The thought of the floudes of the see came likewyse to naught also, for the sonde stode vp and stopped them.

If thou were iudge now betwyxte these two, whom woldest thou iustifie, or whom woldest thou cōdemne? I answered and sayde: Verely it is a foolish thought that they both haue deuysed. For the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see also hath his place to beare his floudes. Then answered he me đ sayde: Thou hast geuen a right iudgment, why iudgest thou not thy self also? For like as the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see to his floudes: ${ }^{b}$ euen so they that dwell vpon earth, maye vnderstonde nothinge, but that which is vpon earth: and he that dwelleth aboue the heauens, maye onely vnderstōde the thinges, that are aboue the hea-

[^819]uens. Then answered I and sayde: I beseke the ( O LORDE) let me have moderstondinge : for it was not my mynde to be curious of thy hye thinges, but of soch as we daylie medle withall: namely, wherfore that Israel is blasphemed of the Heithen, and for what cause the people (whom thou euer hast loued) is geuen ouer, to be punyshed of rngodly nacios: and why the lawe of oure fathers is brought to naught, and the wrytten couenauntes come to none effecte, and we passe awaye out of the worlde as the greshopers, and oure life is a very feare, and we are not worthy to optayne mercy. What wyl he do then vnto his name, which is called vpon ouer vs? Of these thinges have I axed question.

Then answered he me and sayde: The more thou searchest, the more thou shalt maruel, for the worlde hasteth fast to passe awaye, and can not comprehende the thinges, that are promysed for the righteous in tyme to come, ${ }^{c}$ for this worlde is full of vnrighteousnes and weaknes.

But as concernynge the thinges wherof thou axest me, I wyl tell the. 'The euell is sowne, but the destruccion therof is not yet come. If the euell now that is sowne, be not turned vpsyde downe, and yf the place where $\frac{y}{g}$ euell is sowne, passe not awaye, then can not the thinge come $\frac{\dot{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ is sowne with y good. For the corne of euell sede hath bene sowne in the hert of man from the begynnynge, and how moch vngodlynes hath he brought vp wnto this tyme? and how moch shal he yet brynge forth, vntyll he come in to the barne?

Pondre now by thyself, whā $\mathfrak{y}$ corne of euell sede is cutt downe, how greate a barne shal it fyll? I answered and sayde: How and whà shal these thinges come to passe? Wherfore are oure yeares few a euell? And he answered me, sayège: Haist not thou to moch ypon the Hyest, for thy haistynes to be aboue him is but in rayne, thou makest to moch a doo. Dyd not $\dot{y}$ soules also of the rightcous axe question of these thinges in their holynes, sayenge: How longe shal I hope of this fashion? Whan commeth the frute of my barne, and my rewarde? And vpo this Ieremiel the archangel gaue them answere, and sayde: ${ }^{d}$ Euē whan the nombre [^820]lof the sedes is fylled in you: for he hath weyed the worlde in the balaunce: in measure and nombre hath he measured the tyme, and moueth it not, vntyll the same measure be fulfylled. Then answered I and sayde : O LORDE LORDE, now are we all full of symne, and for oure sake peraduenture it is not, that the barne of the righteons shall not be fylled, because of the synnes of the that dwell ypon earth.

So he answered me, $\pi$ sayde: Go ${ }^{\text {y }}$ waye to a woman with childe, and axe her, when she hath fulfilled hir ix. monethes, yf hir childeszbed maye kepe $\hat{y}$ byrth eny loger within her. The sayde I: No LORDE, that ean she not. And he sayde vnto me: In hell the secrete places of soules are like $\hat{y}$ preuy chamber of a woman. For like as a woman that trauayleth, maketh haist, whan the tyme t necessite of the byrth is at hande: Eue so doth she haist to delyuer it that is commytted vito her. Loke what thou desyrest to se, it shalbe shewed the from the begynnynge. Then answered I and sayde: Yf I haue founde fanoure in thy sight, and yf it be possible, and yf I be mete therfore, shewe me then, whether there be more to come the is past, or more past then is for to come. What is past, I knowe: but what is for to come, I knowe not.

And he saide vnto me: Stonde vp vpō y right syde, and I shal expounde the symilitude vnto the. So I stode, beholde, an whote burnynge oue wente ouer before me: $\tau$ it happened $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$ whan the flamme was gone by, the smoke had the vpper hande. After this there wète ouer before me a watery cloude, and sent downe moch rayne with a storme: $\pi$ whan the stormy rayne was past, the droppes remayned still. Then sayde he vito me: like as the rayne is more then the droppes, and as the fyre exceadeth the smoke, euen so $\frac{8}{y}$ measure of the thinges that are past, hath the vpper hande. Then wente the droppes and the smoke aboue: and I prayed and sayde: May I lyue (thynkest thou) vntyll that tyme? Or what shall happen in those dayes? He answered me, and sayde: As for the tokes wherof thou axest me, I maye tell the of thĕ in a parte: but as tonchinge * $\dot{y}$ life, I may not shewe the, for I am not sent therfore.

There shalbe a cōfucion also in many places, and the fyre shal be oft sent agayne, and the wylde beastes shal go their waye, a menstruous wemen shal beare monsters, and salt waters shalbe founde in the swete: one frende shal fight agaynst another: then shal all wyt and vaderstandinge be hyd and put asyde in to their secrete places, © shalbe sought of many, and yet not be founde : then shal vnrighteousnes and volupteousnes haue the 'pperhande vpon earth. One lande also shal axe another, and saye: Is righteousnes gone thorow the? Vp then, and eate, and forsake vs not, as the shepherde that leaueth his flock in the handes of wieked wolues. Then sayde I vnto him: Go thy waye fro me, and come not nye me: a he herde it, and as I sayde, so wēte he his waye fro me. And so I fasted seuen dayes, mournynge and wepynge, like as Vriell the angell commaunded me. And after seuen dayes it happened, that $\dot{y}$ thoughtes of my hert were very greuous vito me agayne, a my soule receaued $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ sprete of voderstandynge, $\tau$ I begane to talke with the most hyest agayne, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, of euery wod of $\frac{8}{y}$ earth $\varepsilon$ of all the trees therof, thou hast ehosen $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ one onely vynyarde : and of all londes of the whole worlde thou hast chosen the one pytt: and of all floures of the groude thou hast chosen the one lylie: and of all the depthes of the see thou hast fylled the one ryuer : and of all builded cities thou hast halowed Sion vnto thy self: and of all $\dot{y}$ foules that are created, thou hast named the one doue: and of all the eatell $\frac{t}{y}$ are made, thou hast prouyded $\dot{j}$ one shepe: © amōge all $\dot{y}$ multitudes of folkes thou hast gotten the one people, and vato this people whom thou louedest, thou gauest a lawe, $\frac{y}{y}$ is proued of all.

And now O LORDE, why hast thou geue this one people ouer vato many? a vpon the one rote thou hast prepared other, and why hast thou seatred $\stackrel{f}{y}$ one onely people amonge many? which treade the downe, yee which haue euer withstonde ${ }^{\circ}$ promyses, a neuer beleued $\hat{y}$ couenaūtes? And though thou werest enemye vnto $\mathfrak{y}$ people, yet shuldest thou punysh the with thine owne handes. Now whā I had spoke these wordes, the angell $\frac{t}{y}$ came to me $\frac{y}{y}$ night afore, was sèt vnto me, a sayde vnto me: Heare me, a herke to y thinge $\frac{t}{y}$ I saye, it I shal tell $\dot{y}$ more. And I sayed: Speake on my LORDE. The sayde he vnto me: Thou art sore vexed a troubled for Israels sake. Louest thou $\stackrel{t}{y}$ people better, then him $\stackrel{t}{y}$ made them? And I sayde: No LORDE, but of very grefe a cōpassion haue I spokē. For my reynes payne me euery houre, because I wolde haue experience of the waye of the most hyest, and to seke out parte of his iudgment. And he sayde vnto me: that thou mayest not.

And I sayde: wherfore LORDE? Where vnto was I borne then? Or why was not my mothers childesbed then my grate? So had I not sene the mysery and trouble of Iacob, and the trauayle of my people of Israel.

And he sayde vnto me: Nöbre me y 玉 thinges, $f_{y}^{f}$ are not yet come: gather me together $y$ droppes, that are seatred abrode: make me $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ floures grene agayne, $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ are wythered: ope me the thinge that is closed: and bringe me forth the wyndes, that are shutt yp: Shewe me the ymage of a voyee, and then shal I declare the the thinge, that thou labourest to knowe. And I sayde: O LORDE LORDE, who may knowe these thinges, but he that hath not his dwellynge with mé? As for me, 1 am vn wise: how maye I the speake of these thinges, wherof thou axest me? The sayde he vnto me: like as thou canst do none of these thinges $\stackrel{ \pm}{y} \mathrm{I}$ haue spoken of, Euen so canst thou not fynde out my iudgment, or in the ende the loue that I have promysed vnto my people. And I sayde: Beholde o LORDE, yet art thou nye moto them that have no ende: and what shal they do that haue bene before me, or we that be now, or they that shal come after vs? And he sayde rato me: I wyll lyeken my iudgment into a rynge. Like as there is no slacknesse of the last, euen so is there no swiftnesse of the first. So I answered a sayde: Coudest thou not make those (that hane bene made, and that be now, and that are for to come) in one, that thou mightest shewe thy iudgment the sooner?

Then answered he me and sayde: The creature may not haist aboue the maker, nether maye the worlde holde the at once, that shalbe ereated.

And I sayde: How hast thou sayde then vnto thy seruaunt, that thou lyuynge maker hast made the ereature lyuynge at onee, a the creature bare it? ene so might it now also beare them that be present, at once. And he sayde vnto me: Axe the childeszbed of a womà, and saye vato her: If thou bringest forth ehildré, why doest thou it not together, but one after another? Praye her therfore, to brynge forth ten children at once. And I sayde: she ean not, but must do it one after another.

Then sayde he vnto me: Euen so haue I geuen a childeszbed vnto the earth, for those that be sowne spon it by processe of tyme. For like as a youge chitie maye not brynge forth the thinges that belonge to the aged, euen so haue l ordened the worlde which I made.

And I axed and sayde: Seynge thou hast now geué me a waye, I wyl speake before $y$ : for oure mother of who thou hast tolde me, is yet yonge, a now she draweth nye into age. He answered me a sayde: Axe a woman that beareth children, $\tau$ she shal tell the. Saye vnto her: wherfore are not they (whom thou hast now brought forth) like those that were before the, but less of stature? And she shal answere the: They $\dot{y}$ be borne in the youth of stregth, are of one fashion: and they that are borne in the tyme of age (whan the childeszbed layleth) are other wyse. Cōsidre now thy self, how that ye are lesse of stature, then those that were before you, and so are they that come after you, lesse then ye, as the creatures which now begynne to be olde, and hane passed ouer the strength of youth. Then sayde I: LORDE I beseke the, yf I hane founde fauoure in thy sight, shewe thy seruaunt, by whom doest thou vyset thy creature?

Tbe bi. Cyapter.

AND he sayde vnto me: In the begynnynge whan the grounde was made, before the worlde stode, or euer $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ wyndes blew, before it thondred and lightened, or euer the foundacions of Paradise were layed, before the fayre floures were sene, or euer the moueable powers were stablished, before $\dot{y}$ innumerable multitudes of angels were gathered together, or euer $\hat{y}$ highnesses of $\hat{y}$ ayre were lifted $v p$, afore $\dot{y}$ measures of the firmament were named, or euer $\mathfrak{y}$ chymneys in Sion were hote, and or the presente yeares were sought out, and or euer the invencions of them $\frac{t}{y}$ now synne, were put asyde, before they were sealed that now gather faith for a treasure: then dyd I cosidre and pondre all these thinges, and they all were made thorow me, and thorow none other: by me also they be ended, and by none other.

Then answered 1 and sayde: which shalbe the partynge asunder of the tymes? Or whan shalbe the ende of the first, and the begynnynge of it that foloweth? And he sayde vito me: From Abrahā vnto Isaac, whā Iacoh t Esau were borne of him, lacobs hande helde first the hele of Esau: for Esau is the ende of this worlde, and Iacob is the begynnynge of it that foloweth. The hande of man betwixte the hele and the hande. Other question (Eszdras) axe thou not.

I answered then and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, I beseke the, shewe thy seruaunt the ende of thy tokés, wherof thou shewdest me parte the last night. So he answered and sayde vnto me: Stōde wp vpon thy fete, and heare the perfecte voyce and sounde. There shal come a greate mocion, but $\stackrel{\&}{y}$ place where thou stōdest shal not be moued. And therfore whan thou hearest the wordes, be not afrayed: for of the ende shal the worde and foundacion of y earth be vnderstonde. And why? the worde therof trembleth and quaketh, for it knoweth, that it must be chaunged at the ende. And it happened, that whā I had herde it, I stode yp vpon my fete and herkened: and beholde, there was a voyce ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{t}}$ spake, and the sounde of it was like the sounde of many waters, and it sayde. Beholde, y dayes come, $\dot{\mathrm{y}} \mathrm{I}$ wyl begynne to drawe nye, and to ryset them that dwell vpo earth, and wyl begynne to make inquysicion of them, what they be $\frac{t}{y}$ have hurte equyte with vnrighteousnes, and whan the lowe estate of Sion shalbe fulfylled: and whan the worlde, that shal vanish awaye, shalbe ouersealed, then wyl I do these tokens.

The bokes shalbe opened before the firmament, and they shal se all together, $\tau$ the children of a yeare olde shal speake with their voyces: the wome with childe shal brynge forth intymely children of thre or fonre monethes olde, and they shall lyue, and be raysed vp: a sodèly shal the sowne places appeare as the visowne, the full store houses shal sodenly be founde emptie, and the trompett shal geue a sounde, which whā euery man heareth, they shalbe haistely afrayed. At that tyme shall frendes fight ${ }^{a}$ one agaynst another like enemies, and the earth shal stonde in feare with them.

The sprynges of the welles shal stonde styll, and in thre houres they shal not renne. Who so ener remayneth from all these thinges that I haue tolde the, shal escape, and se my saluacion, and the ende of youre worlde. And the men that are receaued, shal se it, they [^821]that haue not taisted death fro their byrth : and the hert of the indwellers shalbe chaunged, and turned in to another meanynge : for euell shalbe put out, and disceate shalbe quenched. As for faith, it shal florish, corrupcion shalbe ouereome: and the trueth, which hath bene so longe without frute, shalbe declared.

And it happened whan he talked with me, that I loked demurely vpō him, before who I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I an come to shewe $\mathfrak{y}$, the tyme of $\frac{8}{y}$ night for to come.

If thou wilt praye yet more, and fast seué dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, a greater then before: for thy voyce is herde before the Hyest: for why? the Mightie hath sene thy righteous dealynge, he hath sene also thy chastite, which thou hast had euer sence thy youth: and therfore hath he sent me to shewe the all these thinges, and to saye vuto the: Be of good comforte, and feare not, and haist not with $\dot{y}$ tymes that are past to thynke vayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, $\stackrel{i}{y}$ I wepte agayne, and fasted seuen dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre wekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my hert vexed within me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the Hyest: for my sprete was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy ereature from the begynnynge (euen the first daye) and saydest: Let ${ }^{a}$ heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the sprete, and the darcknesses were yet on euery syde, and sylence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a fayre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be sene. sprete of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder a to make a denysion betwixte the waters, that the one parte might remayne aboue, and the other beneth. Vpon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, $\frac{t}{y}$ the waters were gathered in the seuenth parte of the earth: Sixe partes hast thou dryed $\mathbf{v p}$, and kepte them, to the intēt $\frac{ \pm}{y}$ men might sowe and occupie huszbandrie therin. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was madé. For immediatly there was greate innumerable frute, a many dyuerse pleasures a desyres of temptacion, floures of chaungeable coloure and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Vpon the fourth daye thon comaundedst that the Sonne shulde geue his shyne, and $\dot{y}$ Moone hir light: the starres didest thou sett in ordre, and gauest them a charge, to do seruyce euen into man, that was for to be made. Vpō the fifth daye thou saydest vito the seuenth parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shulde bringe forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the domme water and without soule, brought forth lyuynge beastes at the commaundement of God, that all people might prayse thy wonderous workes. Then didest thou preserue two soules, $\hat{y}$ one thou calldest Enoeh and the other Leuiathan, and didest separate the one from the other: for the seuenth parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoeh thou gauest one parte, which was dryed up the thirde daye, that he shulde dwell in the same parte, wherin are a thousande hilles. But vnto Leuiathā thou ganest the seuenth parte, namely the moyst, and hast kepte him to deuoure what thou wylt, and whan.

Vpon the sixte daye thou gauest comaundement vnto the earth, that before the it shulde brynge forth beastes, eatell and all $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ crepe, $r$ (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou maydest lorde of all thy ereatures: Of him come we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vuto thy self. All this haue I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe, how that the worlde is made for oure sakes. As for the other people which atso come of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but be like a spetle, and hast lickened the abundaūe of them vito a droppe (that falleth) from the rofe of the house.

And now (O LORDE) the Heithe which haue euer bene reputed as nothinge, haue begōne to be lordes' ouer vs, and to deuoure vs : but we thy people (whom thou hast ealled $\mathfrak{y}$ first borne, thy only begotten, and thy feruent louer) are geuen in to their handes and power. If the worlde now be made for oure sakes, why haue we not the inheritaunce in [^822]possession with the worlde? How longe shal this endure?

Cly bii. Clapter.

AND it happened after that 1 had spoken out these wordes, there was sent vnto me an angell (which had bene by me also the nightes afore) and he sayde vito me: $V_{p}$ Eszdras, and heare the wordes that I am come to tell the. And I sayde: speake on LORDE my God. Thē sayde he vuto me: The see is sett in a wyde place, ${ }^{t}$ it might be depe and greate: but the intraũee is narow and small like a ryuer. For who wolde go in to the see, to loke vpon it, and to rule it? If he wente not thorow the narow, how might he come in to the brode?
Item, another. A cite is buylded and sett poon a brode felde, and is full of all goodes: the intraunce is narow and sodane, like as yf there were a fyre at the right hande, and a depe water at the left, and as it were onely one strate path betwiste thee both, so smalli, that there coude but one man go there.

Yf this eite now were geuen to an heyre, a he nener wente thorow this parlous waye, how wolde he receaue his inheritañce? And I sayde: It is so, LORDE. Then sayde he: Euen so is Israel also a porcion. And why? for their sakes haue I made the worlde: © whan Adam trāsgressed my statutes, then was $\mathfrak{y}$ thinge iudged that was done. Then were $\mathfrak{y}$ intraunces of the worlde made narow, full of sorow and trauayle: They are but few a euell, fuil of parels and laboure. For the intraunces of the fore worlde were wyde and sure, and brought immortall frute.
Yf they now which are entred in to this worlde, maye not comprehende these strayte and vayne thinges, moch lesse maye they e $\overline{-}-$ prehende and vnderstonde the secrete thinges: Why disquietest thou thy self then, seynge thou art but a corruptible mā? And what woldest thou knowe, where as thou art but mortall? And why hast thou not receaued in to thine hert the thinge that is for to come, but that is present?

Thé sayde 1: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast ordened in thy lawe, ${ }^{\theta}$ that the righteous shulde inheret these thinges, but that the vnfaithffull and vngodly shulde perishe. Neuer-theles the righteous shall suffre strayte thinges, and hope for wyde: for they that have lyned vngodly a suffred strayte thinges, shal not se the wyde.

And he saide vnto me: There is no iudge abone God, and none that hath vnderstondinge aboue the Hyest. For there be many ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{t}}$ perish, because they despyse y lawe of God that is sett before them. for God hath geuen strayte commaundement to soch as come, that they knowe what they do, and how they shulde lyue: and yf they kepte this, they shulde not be punyshed.

Neuertheles they were not obedient vnto him, but spake agaynst him: ymagined vayne thinges, a purposed to synne, and sayde morouer, that there was no God, © that God regarded it not. His wayes have they not knowne, his lawe haue they despysed, a denyed his promyses: in his statutes a ordinaunces haue they not bene faithfull $\mathbb{t}$ stedfast, and haue not perfourmed his workes.

And therfore Eszdras, vnto the full, plenty: and to the emptye, emptynesse. Beholde, the tyme shal come, $\dot{y}$ these tokens which $I$ haue tolde the, shal come to passe, © the bryde shall appeare: © the earth $\frac{t}{y}$ now passeth awaye, shalbe shewed: a who so euer is delyuered from $\mathfrak{y}$ foresayde euels, shal se my wōders. For my sonne lesus shal be openly deelared, with those ${ }^{\mathrm{t}}$ be with him: and they y remayne, shal be mery in foure hundreth yeares.

After these same yeares shall my sonne Christ dye, and all men that haue life: and y worlde shalbe turned in to the olde sylence seuen dayes, like as in the fore iudgmentes, so that no man shall remayne. And after seuē dayes, the worlde that yet awaketh not, shalbe raysed vp, a shal dye corrupte. And the earth shal restore those that have slepte in her, and so shall the dust those that dwell in sylece, and the secrete places shal delyuer those that be committed vnto them. And $\dot{y}$ most hyest shal be openly declared vpon the seate of iudgment, a all misery shal vanysh awaye, and loge suffringe shalbe gathered together. But the iudgment shall contynue, ý trueth shal remayne, and faith shal waxe stroge, the worke shal folowe, and the rewarde shall be shewed, the righteousnesses shall watch, and the vnrighteousnesses shall beare no rule.

扨

Then sayde I: Abraham prayed first for the Sodomites," a Moses for the fathers $\stackrel{t}{y}$ synned in the wyldernes, a he $\frac{t}{y}$ came after him for Israel, in y tyme of Achas and Samuel: and Dauid for $\mathfrak{y}$ destruccion, and Salomon for them that came in to the Sanctuary, «Helias for those that reccaued rayne, and for the deed, that he might lyue: and Ezechias for $\hat{y}$ people in the tyme of Sennacherib: a dyuerse other in like maner, which haue prayed for many.
Euē so now, seynge y corrupte is growne vp, and wickednes increased, and the righteous haue prayed for the vngodly, wherfore shal it not be so now also?
He answered me, and sayde : This present worlde is not $\dot{y}$ ende, there remayneth moch honoure in it, therfore haue they prayed for the weake. But the daye of dome shalbe the ende of this tyme, and $\dot{y}$ begynnynge of the immortalite for to come, wherin all corrupcion vanysheth, all volupteousnes is lowsed, all myszbelene taken awaye, righteousnes growne, and the verite spronge yp . Then shall no man be able to saue him that is destroyed, ner to oppresse him $\dot{y}$ hath gotté $\dot{y}$玉E victory. I answered the, $\mathbb{a}$ sayde: This is my first c last sayenge : $\dot{y}$ it had bene better, not to haue geuen the earth vnto Adam: or els whan it was geuē him, to kepe him that he shulde not synne. For what profit is it for men now in this present tyme to lyue in heuynes, a after death to loke for punyszment? O thou Adā, what hast thou done? For though it was thou $\dot{y}$ symned, thou art not falle alone, but we all y come of the. For what profit is it vnto vs, yf there be promysed vs an immortall tyme, where as we medle with deadly workes? a that there is pronysed vs an euerlastinge hope, where as we oure selues are euell and vayne? © $\dot{y}$ there are layed vp for vs dwellynges of health a fredome, where as we haue lyued euell? and that the worshipe of $\hat{y}$ Hyest is kepte to defende them, which haue led a pacient lifc, where as we haue walked in $\dot{y}$ most wicked wayes of all? and that there shalbe shewed a paradyse, whose frute endureth for euer, wherin is fredome and medycyne, where as we shal not go in? for we haue walked in vnpleasaunt places: And that the faces of them [^823]which haue absteyned, shal shyne aboue the starres, where as oure faces shalbe blacke and darcke? For whyle we lyued and dyd vnrighteously, we considered not, that we shulde suffe therfore after death?

Thē answered he me, and sayde: This is the consideracion o thought of the battayl, which man hath vpon earth: that yf he be ouereome, he shall suffre as thou hast sayde. But yf he gett the victory, he shall receaue the thinge that I saye. For this is the life, wherof Moses spake vnto the people, whyle he lyued, sayenge: Chose the life, that thou mayest lyue. Neuertheles they beleued him not, nether the prophetes after him, No ner me which haue spoken vnto them, that heuynes shulde not reach vito them to their destruccion, like as ioye is for to come ouer those, that haue suffred the selues to be enfourmed in salvacion.

I answered then a sayde: I knowe LORDE, that the Hyest is mercyfull, in $\dot{y}$ he hath merey vpon them, which are not yet in the worlde, and vpon those also that walke in his lawe: ${ }^{\text {c }}$ and that he is pacient and longe sufferinge towarde those that have symned in their workes: and that he is liberall to gene where as it requyreth : and that he is of greate mercy, for he multiplieth his louynge kyndnesses towarde those that are present, and that are past, and to them which are for to come. For yf he multiplie not his mercies, the worlde shal not be made lyuynge, with those that dwell therin: He geueth also, for yf he gaue not of his gooduesse. that they which hauc done euell, might be eased, the ten thousande parte of men shulde not be made lyuynge. And yf the iudge forgane not those ${ }^{t}$ be healed with his worde, and yf he wolde destroye $\mathfrak{y}$ multitude that stryueth, there shulde be very few left in an innumerable multitude.

Cije viii. ©luapter.

AND he answered me, sayēge: The most $\mathfrak{G}$ hyest made this worlde for many, but the worlde to come for few. I wyl tell the a symilitude, Eszdras: As whan thon axest the earth, it shal saye vnto the, that it geueth moch moulde, wherof erthen vessels are made, but litle of it y golde cometh of.
${ }^{6}$ Deut. 30. d. $\quad$ Rom. 2.a.

Euen so is it with the worke of this worlde. There be many created, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ but few shall be preserned. Then answered I a sayde: Then swalowe y p the witt (thou soule) and deuoure the understondinge, for thon art agreed to herken and to geue eare, and wyllinge to prophecie: for thou hast no longer space genen the, but only to lyue. O LORDE, wilt thon not gene thy seruaunt leue, $y$ we maye praye before the, and that thou mayest geve sede vato oure hert, and buylde oure volerstondinge, that there maye come frute of it: and that enery one which is corrupte, and beareth the state and place of a man, maye lyue?

For thou art alone, and we all are one workmanshipe of thy handes, like as thou hast sayde, and like as the body is fashioned now in the childeszbed, and thou geuest the membres, and thy creature is preserned in fyre and water: a ix. monethes doth thy worke suffire thy creature, which is fashioned in her: but the thinge that preserueth and it ${ }^{t}$ is preserued, shal both be kepte together: a whan tyme is, the childeszbedd delyuereth $\dot{y}$ thinge, that is kepte and growne in her.

For thon hast commaunded the brestes to gene mylek vito the frute, that the thinge which is created and fashioned, maye be norished for a tyme: and then thou disposest and ordrest it with thy mercy, bryngest it vp with thy righteousnes, nurturest it in thy lawe, and refourmest it with thy vnderstondinge, mortifiest it as thy creature, and makest it lyuynge as thy worke. Seinge then that thou destroyest him, which with so greate labours is created and fashioned thorow thy commaundement, thou coudest lyghtly ordene also, that the thinge which is made, might be preserued.

And this I speake now of all men in generall, as thou knowest: but of thy people, for whose sake I am sory: and of thy inheritannce, for whose cause I mourne: and of Israel, for whom I am wofull: and for facob, for whose sake I am greued: therfore begynne I to praye before the, for my self and for them, for I se the fall of vs, euen of vs, that dwell vpon earth. But I haue herde the swiftnes of the iudge, which is to come: therfore heare my voyce, and vnderstōde my wordes, and I shal speake before the.
a Mat. 20. b. and $\geqslant 1$. b.

This is the begymynge of the wordes of $\mathfrak{C}$ Eszdras, before he was receaued: O LORDE, thou that dwellest in enerlastyngnesse, whose eyes are lift vp in the ayre, whose stole is exceading hye, whose glory and maiesty maye not be comprehēded, before whom the hoostes of heauen stonde with tremblinge, whose kepinge is turned in winde and fyre, whose worde is true, whose talkynge is stedfast, whose commaundement is stronge, whose ordynaunce is fearfull, whose loke dryeth up the depthes, whose wrath maketh the mountaynes to melt awaye, a whose trueth beareth wytnes: O heare $\frac{5}{y}$ prayer of thy seruaunt, and marck with thine eares the peticion of thy creature.

For whyle I lyue, I wil speake: and so lōge as $I$ haue vnderstondinge, I will answere. O loke not vpo the symnes of thy people, which serue $y$ in the trueth. Haue no respecte wnto the wicked studies of the Heithen, but to the desyre of those that kepe thy testimonies with sorowes. Thinke not vpon those that haue walked faynedly before the, but vpon them, which with wyll have knowne thy feare.
Let it not be thy wyll to destroye them, which haue had beastly maners, but to loke vpon them that haue clearly taught thy lawe. Take thou no indiguacion at them, which are worse then beastes: but loue them, that allwaye put their trust in $\dot{y}$ righteousnes and glory; for we and oure fathers haue all the same sicknes and disease, but because of oure synnes thou shalt be called mercifull.

For yf thou hast mercy rpon vs, thou shalt be called mercifull, where as we haue no workes of righteousnes: for $\stackrel{8}{y}$ righteous which haue layed vp many good workes together, shall out of their dedes receaue rewarde. For what is man, that thou shuldest take displeasure at him? Or what is the corruptible mortall generacion, that thou shuldest be so rough towarde him?
${ }^{b}$ For of a trueth there is no man amonge them that be borne, but he hath dealt wickedly: and amonge the faithfull there is none, which hath not done amysse. For in this (O LORDE) thy righteousues a thy goodnes shalbe praysed and declared, yf thou be mercifull vnto them, which are not rych in good workes.

[^824]Then answered he me and sayde: Some thinges hast thou spoken a right, and acordinge vnto thy wordes it shal be. For I wil not verely cosidre the worke of them, whieh haue synned before death, before the iudgment, before destrucciō, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ but I wyll reioyse ouer the worke and thought of $\dot{y}$ righteous. I wil remembre also the pilgramege, the holymakynge and the rewarde. Like as I haue spoken now, so shall it come to passe. For as the huszbād man soweth moch sede ypon the grounde, and planteth many trees, and yet allwaye the thinge that is sowne or plated is not all kepte safe, nether doth it all take rote: Euen so is it of them that are sowne in the worlde, they shal not all be preserued.

I answered then dु sayde: If I haue founde grace, then let me speake. Like as the husbāde mans sede perisheth, yf it receaue not rayne in due season, or yf there come to moch rayne vpon it: Euen so perisheth man also, which is created with thy handes, and is like unto thine owne ymage and to thy self, for whose sake thou hast made all thinges, and lickened him vnto the huszbande mans sede. Be not wroth at rs (O LORDE) but spare thy people, and haue merey vpon thine owne inheritaunce: $O$ be mercifull vuto thy ereature.

Then answered he me and sayde: Thinges present are for the present, and thinges to come for soch as be to come. For thon wātest yet moch, seynge thou mayest loue my ereature aboue me: I haue oft times drawne nye unto the, but nener to the vurighteous. In this also thon art maruelous before the Hyest, in that thou hast humbled thy self, as it becommeth the, and hast not regarded thine owne self, $\frac{t}{y}$ thou art had in soch ho-dF noure amonge the righteous. Therfore shal greate wrechidnes and mysery come rpon them, that in the latter tyme shal dwell in y worlde, for they haue walked in greate pryde.

But vuderstonde thou for thy self, and seke out glory for soch as be like the: for moto yon is paradyse opened, the tre of life is plated, the tyme to come is prepared, plenteousnes made ready: a cite is builded for you, and a rest is prepared, yee perfecte goodnes and wyszdome. The rote of euell is marked from you, the weaknes and moth is hyd from you, a into hell flyeth corrupeion in which now haue abused my waies: and they that haue east them out despytefully, shall dwell in paynes.

For soch as in their life hate receaned benefites, and haue not knowne me, and they that have abhorred my lawe, whyle they had yet fredome, and whan they had yet open rowne of amendemēt and conuersion, © vnderstode not, but despysed it: y same must knowe it after death in payne. And therfore be thou nomore carefinll, how the vngodly shalbe punshect, a how the righteous shalbe sated, and whose the worlde is, and for whom the worlde, and whan it is. Then answered I and sayde: "I have talked before a now I speake, and wyl speake also herafter, that there be many moo of them which perish, then shal be saued, like as the floude is greater then the droppes.

And he answered me, sayenge: like as the felde is, so is also the sede: as the floures be, so are the colours also: soch as the workman is, soch is also $\hat{y}$ worke: and as the huszband man is himself, so is his huszbandrye also, for it was the tyme of the worlde. And whan 1 prepared for then that are now, or euer the worlde was made, wher in they shulde dwel, then was there no man that withstode me.
c Now whan euery one was, and the maker also in the worlde which is now prepared, and the moneth that ceaseth not, and the lawe whieh is vnseareheable, their maners were corrupte. So l considered the worlde, and beholde, there was parell, because of $\dot{y}$ thoughtes that were come in to it. And I sawe, and spared the greatly, and haue kepte me a wynebery of the grapes, and a plante from anonge many generacions. Let the multitude perish the , which are growne vp in vayne, and let my grape a wynebery be kepte: euen my plante: for with greate laboure haue I made it v p .

Neuertheles yf thou wilt take vpon the yet seuen dayes mo (but thou shalt not fast in them) go thy waye then in to $\dot{y}$ felde of floures, where no house is buylded, and eate onely of the floures of the felde, taist not fle h, drinke no wine, but eate floures onely. Praye vnto the Hyest contynually, so will I come, and talke with the.

So 1 wente my waye and came in to the felde which is called Ardath (like as he com-[^825]maunded me) and there $I$ sat amonge $\dot{y}$ floures, and ate of the herbes of the felde, and $\mathfrak{y}$ meate of the same satisfied me. After seuen dayes I sat upon the grasse, a my hert was vexed within me like as afore: and I opened my mouth, and beganne to talke before the Hyest, and saide: O LORDE, thou $\dot{y}$ shewest thy self vito vs, ${ }^{b}$ thou hast deelared and opened thy self vato oure fathers in the wyldernes, in a place where no man dwelleth, in a baren place, whan they came out of Egipte, and thou spakest, sayège: Heare me O Israel, and marke my worles thou sede of Iacob. Beholde, I sowe my lawe in you, and it shal brynge frute in you, $a$ ye shalbe honoured in it for euer. For oure fathers which receaned the lawe, kepte it not, and obserued not thy ordinaunces and statutes, a the frute of $\dot{y}$ lawe was not declared: for it might not, for why? it was thine. For they that receaned it, perished, ${ }^{c}$ because they kepte not y thinge that was sowne in them.

It is a custome whan the grounde receaueth sede, or the see a shipp, or a vessell meate and drynke, that, whan it perisheth or is broken wherin a thinge is sowne, or wherin eny thinge is put: the thinges also perishe a are broken, which are sowne or putt therin. But vnto vs it hath not happened so: for we ! y have receaued the lawe, perish in synne, and oure hert also which receaued the lawe: notwithstondinge "the lawe perisheth not, but remayneth in his laboure.

And whan I considered these thinges in my hert after this maner, I loked aboute me with myne eyes, ${ }^{e}$ and rpon the right syde I sawe a woman, which mourned sore, made greate lamentacion, and wepte with loude voyce: hir elothes were rent in peces, a she had aszshes vpon hir heade.

Thè let I my thoughtes go, $\frac{t}{\mathrm{y}} \mathrm{I}$ was in, a turned me vato her, © sayde : wherfore wepest thou? why art thou so sory $\mathbb{t}$ discomforted? And she sayde vnto me: Syr, let me bewayle my self $\mathbb{T}$ take yet more sorowe: for I am sore vexed in my mynde, a brought very lowe. And I said vnto her: what ayleth fy? Or who hath done eny thinge to $y$ ? tell me. She sayde: l have bene vnfrutefull and baren, and haue had an huszband thirtie yeares. And these xxx. yeares I do nothinge els daye and night and all houres, but make my prayer to y Hyest. After thirtie yeares God herde me thy handinayden, loked vpon my misery, considred my trouble, and gave me a somne, and I was glad of him, so was my huszbād also and all my neghbours, and we gaue greate honoure vnto $\dot{y}$ Mightie. And I norished him with greate trauayle. So whan he grewe vp , $\tau$ came to the tyme, that he shulde haue a wife, I made a feast.

AND it happened that whan my sonne wente in to his chamber, he fell downe, and dyed: the ouerthrew we all the lightes, and all my neghbours rose rp to cofforte me. The toke I my rest vnto the seēde daye at night: © whan they had all rested, $\frac{\stackrel{t}{y} \text { they }}{}$ might comforte me, I rested also, and rose ip by night, and fled, and am come hither in to this felde, as thou seist: and am purposed not to come in the cite, but to remayne here, and nether to eate ner drynke, but continually to mourne and to fast, vntill I dye.

Then let I my meditacions and thoughtes fall, that I was in, and spake to her in displeasure: Thou foolish woman, seist thou not oure heuynes and mournynge, and what happeneth vnto vs? how Sion oure mother is all wofnll and sory, and how she is cleane brought downe and in misery? seinge we be all now in heuynes, a make oure mone (for we be all soroufull.) As for the heuynes that thou takest, it is but for one sonne. Demaunde the earth, and she shal tell the, that it is she which ought (by reason) to mourne, for the fall of so many that growe vpon her. For from the begymnynge all men are borne of her, a other shal come: and beholde, they walke allmost all in to destruccion, and many of them shalbe roted out.

Who shulde then (by reason) make more mournynge, then she, that hath lost so greate a multitude? and not thou, which art sory but for one. But yf thou woldest saye vnto me: My mournynge is not like the mournynge of the earth, for I haue lost the frute of my body, which I bare with heuynes: as for the earth, acordinge to the ordynaunce of $\mathfrak{y}$ earth onely, so that many are gone awaye in her, as geueth hir frute vnto man, for him $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{t}}$ made her. And therfore witholde thy sorove and heuynes by thy self, and loke what happeneth vnto $\frac{g}{y}$, beare it strōgly. ${ }^{a}$ Foryf thou iurlgest the marek a ende of God to be righteons and good, and receauest his councell in tyme. thou shalt be commended therin. Go thy waye then in to the cite to thy husbande.
3 it is come to passe: Then saye I vnto the: like as thou hast borne with trauayle a sorowe, euen so the earth also from the begynnynge

And she sayde vito me: that wyll I not do, I will not go in to the cite, but heare will I dye. So I commoned more with her, and sayde: Do not so, but be coūceled, and folowe me: for how many falles hath Sion? Be of good comforte because of the sorowe of Ierusalem. For thou seist that oure Sanctuary is layed waist, oure aulter broken, oure temple destroyed, oure playenge of instrumentes and synginge layed downe, the thankesgeuynge put to sylence, oure myrth is vanished awaye, the light of oure candlestick is quenched, $f$ Arke of the couenaunt is take from vs, all oure holy thinges are defyled, and the name that is called rpon ouer vs, is dishonoured, oure children are put to shame, oure prestes are brent, oure Leuites are caried awaye in to captiuyte, oure virgins are defyled, and oure wyues rauyshed, oure rightcous men spoyled, and oure childrē destroyed, oure yonge men are brought in bōlage, and oure stroge worthies are become weake: and Sion (which seale is ${ }^{\circ}$ greatest of all) is lowsed xp from hir worshipe: for she is deliuered in to the handes of them that hate vs .

And therfore shake of $\stackrel{8}{y}$ greate heuynes, and putt awaye the multitude of sorowes: that the Mightie maye be mercyfull vato the, and that the Hyest maye geue the rest from $\dot{y}$ laboure and trauayle. And it happened, that whan I was talkynge with her, hir face dyd shyne $\pi$ glyster, so that I was afraied of her, and mused what it might be. And immediatly she cast out a greate voyce, very fearfull, so that $\dot{y}$ earth shoke at the noyse of the woman: and I loked, and beholde, the woman appeared unto me nomore: but there was a cite buylded, and a place was shewed from the grounde and foundacion.

Then was I afrayed, and cried with loude voyce, and sayde: where is Yriel the angell, ${ }^{5}$ which came to me at the first? For he hath caused me to come in many consideracions and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupeion, and my prager to rebuke. And as 1 was speakynge these wordes, he came vato me, and loked apon me, and I laye as one that had bene deed, and myne viderstandinge was altered, and he toke me by the right hande, and comforted me, and set me vp ypon my fete, and sayde vato me: what ayleth the? and why is thine vnderstandinge vexed? and the vuderstondinge of thy hert, and wherfore art thou sory? And I sayde: Because thou hast forsaken me: and I haue done acordynge vito thy wordes, ${ }^{a}$ I wente in to the felde, and there haue I sene thinges, that I am not able to expresse. He saide vuto me: Stōle sp and be manly, and I shal geue the exortacion.

Then sayde 1: Speake on to me my LORDE, forsake me not, lest I dye in vayne: for I have sene that I knewe not, 3 herde that I do not knowe. Or shall my mderstondynge be disceaned, and my mynde? But now I beseke the, that thou wilt shewe thy seruaunt of this wöder. He answered me the and sayde: heare me, and I shall enfourme the, and tell the wherfore thon art afrayed, for the Hyest hath opened many secrete thynges mnto the.

He hath sene that thy waye is right, and that thou takest sorowe continually lor thy people, and makest greate lanentacion for Sion: and therfore vaderstonde the vision which thou sawest a litle whyle agoo after this maner: Thou sawest a woman mournynge, and thou hast comforted her: Nenertheles now seist thou the licknes of the woman nomore, but thou thoughtest there was a cite buylded: and like as she tolde the of the fall of her sonne, so is this the answere: The woman whom thou sawest, is Sion: and where as she tolde the, that she hath bene thirtie yeares vofrutefull and baren, those are the xxx. yeares, wherin there was no offeringe made in her.

But after xxx. yeares Salomon buylded her, and offred, and then bare the baren a sonne. And where as she tolde the, that she norished him with laboure, that was the dwellynge of Ierusalem. But where as the sonne dyed in hir chamber, that is the fall of lerusalem. And thou sawest hir lickenesse, how she mourned for hir sonne: and what els happened vnto her, I haue shewed $\frac{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$.

And now God seyth, that thou art sory in thy mynde, and suffrest from $y^{\circ}$ hert for her: and so hath he shewed the hir clearnesse, and the fayrnes of hir bewtye.

And therfore I bad the remarne in the felde, where no house is buylded. For I knew $\frac{t}{y}$ the Hyest wolde shew this vnto the, therfore I commaunded the to go in to the felde, where no foundacion ner buyldinge is. For in the place where the Hyest wyll shewe his cite, there shall be no mans buyldinge. And therfore feare not, and let not thine hert be afrayed, but go thy waye in, and se the glorious aud fayre buyldinge, and how greate it is, and how greate thou thinkest it after the measure of thine eyes, $\tau$ then shalt thou heare as moch as thine eares maye comprehēde. For thou art blessed aboue many other, and art called with the Hyest, as $\dot{f}$ few. But tomorow at night thou shalt remayne here, and so shal the Hyest shewe the visions of hye thinges, which he wyll do wnto them that dwell rpon earth in 8 last dayes. So I slepte the same night like as he comaunded me.

Tye ri. Cbapter.

THEN sawe I a dreame: and beholde, there came vp from $\frac{8}{y}$ see an Aegle, which had xij. wynges and thre heades: And I sawe, and beholde, he spred his wynges oner all the earth, and all the wyndes of the ayre blew in them, and so they were put together agayne. And I behelde, and out of his fethers there grew other litle contrary fethers: the heades rested, the head in the myddest was greater then the other, yet rested it with the residue.

Morouer I sawe, that the Aegle flew with his wynges, and raigned vpon earth, a ouer all them that dwell spon the earth: and I sawe $\stackrel{t}{y}$ all thinges voder heauen were subiecte unto him, and no man spake against him, no not one creature vpon earth. I sawe also that the Aegle stode vp vpon his clawes, a gaue a sounde with his fethers, a a voyce sayege after this maner: watch not all together, slepe euery mi in his owne place, a watch for a tyme, but let the heades be preserued at the last. Neuertheles I sawe, $\frac{t}{y}$ the voyce wente not out of his heades, but from the myddest of his body. And I nombred his cotrary fethers, a beholde, there were eight of them. And I loked, $\tau$ beholde, vpon the right syde there arose one fether, $\tau$ raigned ouer all the earth. And it happened, y whan it raigned, the ende of it came, $t$ the place therof appeared no more. So the nexte folowinge stode pp , a raigned, $\pi$ had a greate tyme: © it happened, $\stackrel{+}{y}$ whan it raigned, the ende of it came also like as the first, so that it appeared nomore.

Then came there a voyce vnto $i t, \pi$ sayde: Heare thou $\dot{y}$ hast kepte in the earth so loge, this I saye vnto the, before thou begynnest to appeare nomore: There shal none after $\hat{y}$ atterne unto thy tyme. Then arose the thirde, I raigned as the other afore, a appeared nomore also. So wete it with all the residue one after another, so $\stackrel{t}{y}$ euery one raigned, a the appeared nomore. The I loked, a beholde, in processe of tyme the fethers $y^{\frac{t}{y}}$ folowed were set up ypo the right syde, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they might rule also: and some of the ruled, but within a while they appeared nomore: for some of the were set vp, but ruled not. After this I loked, a beholde, $\dot{y}$ xij. fethers appeared nomore, and the two wynges: a there was nomore ypon the Aegles body, but two heades that rested, $\pi$ sise fethers. Then sawe I also, $\stackrel{ \pm}{y}$ the sixe fethers were parted in two, तf remayned vuder the heade, $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ was rpon the right syde, for the foure cōtynued in their place. So I loked, and beholde, they that were rnder the wynges, thought to set rp them selues, and to haue the rule. Then was there one set vp, but shortly it appeared nomore, and the seconde were sooner awaye then the first. And I behelde, and lo, the two thought also by the selues to raigne: © what they so thought, beholde, there waked one of the heades that were at rest, namely, it that was in the myddest, for that was the greater of the two heades. And then I sawe, that the two heades were fylled with him, and the heade was turned with them $\frac{t}{y}$ were by him, $\tau$ ate vp ${ }^{f}$ two vnder wynges, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ wolde haue raigned.
But this heade put $\dot{y}$ whole earth in feare, and bare rule in it, ouer all those $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$ dwelt rpon earth with moeh laboure, and he had the gouernaunce of the worlde, ouer all the foules that haue bene. After this I loked, and beholde, the heade that was in the middest, sodenly appeared nomore, like as $\mathfrak{y}$ wynges: then came the two heades, which ruled ypon earth, a ouer those that dwelt therin. And I behelde, a lo, the heade tpon the right side, deuoured it that was ypon the left syde. And I herde a voyce, which sayde unto me: loke before the, and considre the thinge that thou seist. Then I sawe, and beholde, as it were a lyon that roareth, rennynge haistely out of y wod, and he sent out a mans voyee vito the Aegle, and sayde: Heare thou, I wyl talke with the, and the Hyest shal saye vnto the: Is it not thou that hast the victory of the foure beastes, whom I made to raigne vpon earth and in my worlde, and that $\dot{y}$ ende of their times might come thorow the ?

And the fourth eame, and ouerwanne all the beastes that were past, and had power ouer the worlde with greate fearfulnes, and ouer the whole compasse of the earth with the most wicked laboure, and so longe time dwelt he vpon the earth with disceate, a the earth hast thou iudged not with trueth. For thou hast troubled the meke, thou hast hurte the peaceable and quyete, thou hast loued lyers, and destroyed the dwellynges of them that brought forth frute, and hast cast downe the walles of soch as dyd the no harme. Therfore is thy wrongeous dealynge and blasphemy come sp rnto the Hyest, and thy pryde nnto the Mightie. The Hyest also hath loked voo the proude tymes, and beholde, they are ended, and their abhominacions are fulfilled. And therfore appeare nomore thou Aegle, and thy horrible wynges, and thy wicked fethers, and thy vngracious heades, and thy synfull clawes, and all thy vame body: that the earth maye be refreshed, and come agayne to herself, whan she is deliuered from thy violence, and that she maye hope for $y$ iudginent and merey of him that made her.

Cye miz. Cyapter.

AND it happened whī ${ }^{\mathrm{y}}$ Lyō spake these wordes suto $\frac{8}{y}$ Aegle, ${ }^{\frac{1}{y}}$ heade $\dot{y}^{\mathfrak{y}}$ afore had $y$ vpperhaide, appeared nomore: nether dyd $\frac{y}{y}$ foure wynges appeare eny more, $\frac{t}{y}$ came to hī, a were sett up to raigne, a their kyngdome was small a full of proure.

And I sawe, a beholde, they appeared nomore, $\boldsymbol{x}$ y whole body of $\grave{y}$ Aegle was brēt, a the earth was in greate feare. Then awaked 1 out of the traunce of my mynde, and from greate feare, and sayde rnto my sprete: Lo, this hast thou geuen me, in $\frac{t}{y}$ thou searchest [^826]'ont the wayes of the Hyest: 1o, yet am I weery in my minde, and very weake in my sprete, and litle stregth is there in me, for the greate feare that I receaned this night. Therfore wil I now beseke the Hyest, $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ he wyl comforte me rnto the ende, a I sayde: LORDE LORDE yf I haue founde grace before thy sight, and yf I am iustified with $\dot{y}$ before many other, a yf my prayer be come up before thy face, eoforte me then, and shew the thy seruaunt the interpretacion a playne differece of this horrible sight, that thou mayest perfectly cōforte my soule: for thou hast indged me worthy, to shew me $\mathfrak{y}$ last of tymes.

And he sayde rnto me: this is the interpretacion of this sight, The Aegle whom thou sawest come yp from the see, is the kingdome which was sene in the vision of thy brother ${ }^{a}$ Daniel, but it was no expounded vnto him, for now I declare it vnto the.

Beholle, the dayes come, that there shal ryse rp a kyngdome ypo earth, and it shal be feared aboue all the kyngdomes $\frac{t}{y}$ were before it. In the same kyngdome shal xij. kynges raigne, one after another. For the secode shal begynne to raigne, and shal have more tyme the the other, at this do ${ }^{\circ}$ xij. wynges signifie, which thou sawest. As for the voyce that spake, and that thou sawest go out from the heades but not from $y$ body, it betokeneth, that after the tyme of that kyngdome there shall aryse greate stryuynges, and it shal stonde in parell of fallynge: neuertheles it shal not yet fall, bot shal be set in to his beginnynge. And ẙ eight voderwynges which thou sawest haige vnto $\hat{y}$ wynges of hì, betoke, ${ }^{t}$ in hī there shal aryse eight kynges, whose tyme shalbe but small, a their yeares swift, $\pi$ two of them shal beare. But whan the middest tyme eommeth, there shal be foure kepte in the tyme, whan his tyme begynneth to come that it maye be ended, but two shal be kepte into $\mathfrak{y}$ ende.

And where as thou sawest thre heades restynge, this is the interpretacion: $\ln$ his last shal the Hyest rayse up thre kyngdomes, and call many agayne in to the, ot they shal have the dominion of the earth, and of those that dwell therin, with moch laboure aboue all those ${ }^{\prime}$ were before the. 'Therfore are they called $\dot{y}$ heades of the Aegle: for it is they y shal [^827]bringe forth his wickednes agayne, a $\frac{t}{y}$ shal perfourme at fynish his last. And where as thou sawest, that ${ }^{\prime}$ greate heade appeared nomore, it signifieth, that one of them shal dye vpō his bed, a yet with payne, for the two that remayne, shalbe slayne with the swerde. For the swerde of the one shal deuoure the other, but at the last shal he fall thorow the swerde himself.

And where as thou sawest two voderwinges vpon the heade that is on the right syde, it signifieth, that it is they, who the Hyest hath kepte vnto their ende: this is a small kyngdome, a full of trouble. The Lyon whō thou sawest rysinge yp out of the wodd and roaringe, and speakinge vito the Aegle, and rebukynge him for his vnrighteousnesse, is the wynde, which the Hyest hath kepte for them and for their wickednesse unto the ende: he shal reproue them, and rente them asunder before them. For he shal sett them lyuynge before the iudgment, and shal rebuke them: for the residue of my people shal he delyuer with trouble, those $\dot{y}$ be preserued ouer myne endes: and he shal make them ioyfull vntyll the commynge of the daye of iudgment, wherof I haue spoken wnto the from the begynnynge. This is the dreame that thou sawest, and this is the interpretacion. Thou only hast bene mete to knowe the seerete of the Hyest.

Therfore wryte all these thinges $\frac{t}{y}$ thou hast sene in a boke, and hyde them, and teach the the wyse in the people, whose hertes thou knowest maye comprehēde and kepe these seeretes. But wayte thou here $\dot{y}$ self yet seuen dayes moo, that it maye be shewed the, what so euer it pleaseth the Hyest to declare vnto the, and with that he wente his waye.

And whan all the people perceaned, $\frac{t}{y}$ the seuen dayes were past, a I not come agayne into $\dot{y}$ cite, they gathered them all together from the least vinto the most, a came vnto me, and sayde: what haue we offended the? and what euell haue we done agaynst the, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thou forsakest us, a syttest here in this place? For of all people thou only art left vs, as a grape of the vyne, and as a candell in a darcke place, and as an hauen $x$ shippe preserued from $\dot{y}$ tēpest. Hane we not els aduersite ynough, but thou must forsake us? Were it not better for vs, that we had bene brent with Sion? For we are no better, then they $\stackrel{t}{y}$ dyed there:
and they wepte with loude voyce. Then answered İ thē a sayde: Be of good cōforte O Israel, a be not heuy thou house of Iacob: for § Hyest hath you in remēbraūce, © y Mightie hath not forgottē you in tētaciō. As for me, I haue not forsakê you, nether am I departed from you: but am come in to this place to praye, because of $\mathfrak{y}$ mysery of Israel, that I might seke mercy for $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ lowe estate of youre Säctuary. And now go youre waye home euery mā, and after these dayes wyl I come mito yout. So the people wette their waye in to the cite, like as I commaunded them: but I remayned still in the felde seuen dayes, as $\hat{y}$ angell bad me, and I ate onely of the floures of the felde, and had my meate of the herbes in those dayes.

The riii. Chapter.

A A ND it happened after the seué dayes, $\dot{y}$ I dreamed a dreame by night. And beholde, there arose a wynde from the see, that it moued all the floudes therof. And I loked, and beholde, the man was stronge and increased with the cloudes of heauen: and whan he turned his countenaunce to evesider, all the thinges trembled that were sene vider him: and whan the voyce wente out of his mouth, all they brent that herde him, like as the earth whan it feleth the fyre.

After these I sawe, a beholde, there was gathered together a multitude of mé out of nombre from the foure wyndes of the heaué, to fight agaynst $\dot{y}$ man, that came out from $\mathfrak{y}$ see. And I loked, a beholde, he graued himself a greate moūtayne, and flew vp vpon it. But I wolde haue sene the border or place, wherout the hill was grauen, a I coude not.

I sawe after these, y all they which eame to fight agaynst him, were sore afrayed, and yet durst they fight. Neuertheles whan he sawe the fearsnesse and violence of the people, he nether lift yp his hande ner helde swerde, ner eny weapen: but onely (as I sawe) he sent out of his mouth as it had bene a blast of fyre, and out of his lippes $\dot{y}$ wynde of the flamme: and out of his tōge he east out sparkes and stormes, and they were all myxte together: the blast of fyre, the wynde of the flames, and $y$ greate storme, $\pi$ fell with a russhe vpon $\dot{y}$ people, which was prepared to fight a bret the qp eueryehone: so that of the innumerable multitude there was nothinge sene, but onely dust © smoke. Whan I saw this, I was afrayed.

Afterwarde sawe I the same man come downe from the mountayne, and callinge vnto him another peaceable people: and there eame moch people vnto him: some were glad some were sory, some of them were bounde, so that they were caried and brought forth.

Then was I sick thorow greate feare, and I awaked, and sayde : thon hast shewed $\mathfrak{y}$ seruaunt all $\grave{y}$ wōders frō ý begynnynge, a hast counted me worthy, $\frac{y}{y}$ thou mightest receaue my prayer: shewe me now yet the interpretacion of this dreame. For thus I cosidre in my vaderstandinge: Wo vnto them that shal be left in those dayes, © moeh more wo vnto the that are not left behynde: for they that were not left, were in heuynes.

Now vuderstonde I $\dot{y}$ thinges that are layed rp in the latter dayes, which shal happen vnto them, and to those that are not left behynde. Therfore are they come in to greate parells, and many necessities, like as these dreames deelare. Yet is it easier, $\dot{y}$ he which suffreth hurte, come in these, then to passe awaye as a cloude out of the worlde, and now to se $y$ thinges $y$ yhal happen in $y$ last.

Then answered he me, and sayde: The interpretaeion of the sight shall I shewe the, and I will open wnto the, the thinge $\frac{+}{y}$ thou hast requyred. For thou hast spoken of them that are left behynde, and this is the interpretacion. He that taketh awaye the parell in that tyme, hath kepte himself. 'They that be fallen in to harme, are soch as haue workes a faith vnto the Most mightie. Knowe this therfore, that they whieh be left behynde, are more blessed, then they that be deed. This is the meanynge of the rision. Where as thou sawest a man commynge up from the depe of the see, $\hat{y}$ same is he whom God the Hyest hath kepte a greate season, which by his owne self shall delyuer his ereature, a he shal ordre the that are left behynde. And where as thou sawest, ${ }^{\frac{1}{y} \text { out of his nouth there came a blast }}$ of wynde, fyre and storme, a how $\dot{y}$ he lift vp nether swerde ner weapen, but $\dot{y}$ the ruszshinge in of him destroyed the whole multitude, $\dot{y}$ came to fight agaynst him: it signifieth, that the dayes come, whan God wyll delyuer the $\hat{y}$ are riow earth, $\pi$ in a traunce of mynde shall he come vpon thé, $\dot{y}$ dwell in the earth. And one shal vodertake to fight agaynst another, one cite agaynst another, one phace agaynst another, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ one people agaynst another, $D$ I one realme agaynst another. Whan this commeth to passe, then shal the tokens come, that I shewed the before: and the shal my some be declared, who thon sawest clymme vp as a mi. And whan all $\dot{y}$ people heare his voyee, euery man shal in their owne lōde leaue the battayll, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they haue one agaynst another, and an innumerable multitude shall be gathered together, as they that be willinge to come and to onercome him by fightinge. But he shal stode vpon the toppe of the mount Sion. Neuertheles sion shall come, a shall be shewed, beyuge prepared ot buylded for all men, like as thou sawest the hill grauen forth without eny hides. But my some shal rebuke the people ${ }^{t}$ are come for their wickednes, with the tempest, and for their euell ymaginacions: and their paynes wherwith they shal be punyshed, are lickened vnto the flamme: and without eny laboure shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is copared unto the fyre.

And where as thou sawest, that he gathered another peaceable people vnto his: those are the ten trybes, which were caried awaye presoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whom ${ }^{b}$ Salmanasar the kinge of Assiria toke presoner, and caried them ouer $\dot{y}$ water, and so came they in to another londe.

But they gave them this councell, $\frac{t}{y}$ they shulde leane the multitude of the Heithè, and to go forth in to a farther countre, where nener mankymde dwelt: that they might there kepe their statutes, which they neuer kepte in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narow passages of the water of Euphrates, and "God shewed tokens for thē, and helde styll the floude tyll they were passed oner: for thorow that countre there was a greate waye, namely of a yeare and an half iourney, for the same region is called Asareth. Then dwelt they there moto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne, $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ Hyest shall holde styll the sprynges of the streame agayne, that they maye go thorow, therfore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now whan he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal dēfede his people that remayne, and then shal he shew them greate wonders.

Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man commynge tp from the depe of the see?

And he sayde vito me: Like as thou cāst nether seke out ner knowe these thinges that are in the depe of the see, euen so maiest thou not se my sonne, or those that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the interpretacion of the dreame which thou sawest, therfore thou onely art here lightened: for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and applied thy diligence wnto myne, and sought it. ${ }^{d}$ Thy life hast thou ordred in wyszdome, and hast ealled moderstondinge thy mother, and therfore haue I shewed the $\mathfrak{y}$ treasure of the Hyest. After thre dayes I wil shew the more, and talke with the at more large, yee heuy and wonderous thinges wyl I declare vnto the.

Then wente I forth in to y felde, genynge prayse and thankes greatly vnto God, because of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and because he gouerneth the same, and soch as is in tyme, and there I satt thre dayes.

$\mathfrak{C y} \mathfrak{e x i i j} . \mathfrak{C y a p t r}$.

VPON the thirde daye I satt vnder an oke tre, then came there a voyce mnto me out of the bush, 3 sayde: Eszdras, Eszdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE, and stode rp vpon my fete. The spake he vnto me: ' In the bush dyd I appeare mnto Moses, 3 talked with him, whā my people serued in Egipte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egipte, a brought him vpō $\dot{\ddot{y}}$ mount Sion, where I helde him by me a longe season, and tolde him my wonderous workes, and shewed him $\dot{y}$ secretes of the tymes, and the ende, and commaunded him, sayēge : These wordes shalt thou declare, a not hyde the. And now I saye nnto the, that thou laye rp in thine hert the dreames that thou hast sene, and the interpretacions which I have shewed the: for thou shalt be receaued of all, thou shal be turned and remayne with my conncell, and with soch as be like the, vntyll $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$. tymes be ended. For the worlde hath lost his youth, and the tymes begynne to waxe olde. For the tyme is deuyded in to twolue partes, ${ }^{\text {d }} 3$ Reg. 5. Prou. 7. a.
c Exo. 3. a.
and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the tenth parte: yet remayneth there that, which is after $\mathfrak{y}$ half of $\dot{y}$ tenth parte.

Therfore prepare and ordre thy house, and refourme thy people: comforte soch of them as be in trouble: and tell now of the destruccion: let go from the mortall thoughtes: cast awaye the burthens of man: put of the weake nature: laye vp in some place $\mathfrak{y}$ thonghtes that are most heuy rnto the, and haist the to flyt from these tymes: for soch enell a wickednesse as thou hast now sene happe, shal they do yet moch worse. For the weaker that the worlde and the tyme is, the more shal "synne and wickednesse increase, in them that dwell vpo earth. For the trueth is fled farre awaye, $\pi$ lesynge is hard at hande. For now haisteth the vision to come, that thou hast sene.

Then answered 1 and sayde: Beholde LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded me, and refourme the people which are present. But they $\frac{t}{y}$ shal be borne afterwarde, who wyl exhorte or rebuke thē? Thus the worlde is set in dareknes, and they $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ dwel therin, are without light: for thy lawe is kyndled, because no man knoweth the thinges that are done of the, or that shalbe done. If I have foide grace before the, sende the holy goost in to me, and I shall wryte all that hath bene done in the worlde sens the begynnynge, which was wrytten in thy lawe, that men maye fynde the path, and that they whieh wyl lyue in the latter dayes, may lyue.

And he answered me, sayēge: Go y waye, gather thy people together, a saye mino the', that they seke the not for xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many boxe trees, and take with the Sarea, Dabria, Selemia, Echanus and Asial, these fyue, which are ready to wryte swiftly, and come hither, and I shal light a cādle of vnderstōdinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thinges be perfourmed which thou shalt begynne to wryte. And then shalt thou deelare some thinges openly monto the perfecte, and some thinges shalt thou shew secretly vito $\hat{y}$ wyse. Tomorow this houre shalt thou begynne to wryte.
17 Then wēte I forth (as he commaūded me) and gathered all ý people together, and sayde: Heare these wordes o Israel: Oure fathers from the begynnynge were straungers in Egipte, ${ }^{-}$Mat. 24. a. 1 Joh. 2. c. ${ }^{b}$ Deut. 4.5.
from whēee they were delynered, and receaned the lawe of life, ${ }^{\text {b }}$ "which they kepte not, which ye also haue trāsgressed after thē. Then was this londe and the londe of Sion parted amōge you by the lot to possesse. But youre fathers and ye youre selues also haue done vnrighteousnes, $\pi$ haue not kepte the wayes which the Hyest comaunded you. And for so moch as he is a righteous iudge, be toke from you in tyme the thinge that he had geuen you. And now are ye here and youre brethren amoge you. Therfore yf so be that ye wil subdue youre owne vnderstandinge, and refourme youre hert, ye shal be kepte aliue, đ after death shal ye opteyne merey, For after death shall the iudgment come, whan we shal lyue agayne: and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and $\dot{y}$ names of the vngodly with their workes shalbe declared. Let no mā therfore come now wnto me, ner axe eny question at me these xl. dayes.

So I toke the fyue men (as he commaunded me) and we wente in to the felle, and remayned there. The next daye a voyce called me sayēge: ${ }^{\text {c }}$ Eszdras, Open thy mouth, $\pi$ drynke that I geue the. The opened I my mouth, a beholde, he reached me a full euppe, which was full of water, but the colour of it was like fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And whā I had dronken it, my hert had inderstondinge, and wyszdome grew in my brest: for my sprete was kepte in remembraunce, and my mouth was opened and shut no more. The Hyest gaue mderstondinge vnto the fyue men, $\dot{y}^{\frac{t}{y}}$ they wrote $\dot{y}$ hye thiges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the night they ate bred: as for me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. dayes, they wrote two hundreth $\tau$ foure bokes.

And it happened whit the xl, dayes were fulfilled, that the Hyest spake, sayenge: The first that thou hast wrytte, speake openly, ${ }^{t}$ the worthy and mworthy maye rede it. But kepe $\dot{y}$ lxx. last, $\frac{i}{y}$ thou mayest shew it onely to soch as be wyse amonge thy people. For in them is the sprynge of vuderstōdinge, the fountayne of wyszdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

BEHOLDE, speake thou in the eares of $\mathfrak{A}$ my people the wordes of prophecie, which I wyll put in $\frac{8}{y}$ mouth, saieth the LORDE: and cause them to be wrytten in a letter, for it is the trueth. leare not the ymaginaciōs against $\dot{y}$, let not $\mathfrak{y}$ mfaithfulnes of them trouble the, that speake agaynst the. For all the mafaithfull shal dye in their vnfaithfulnes. Beholde saieth the LORDE, I wil brynge plages vpon the worlde: $\dot{y}$ swerde, honger, death and destruccion, for wickednes hath the rpper hande in all $\hat{y}$ earth, and their shamefull workes are fulfilled.
${ }^{c}$ Eze. S. a. Apo. 10. b.

Therfore saieth the LORDE: I wil holde my tonge nomore vnto their wickednesse, which they do so rngodly: nether wil I suffre them in the thinges, that they deale with all so wiekedly. "Beholde, the innocent bloude of the troubled crieth vito me, and the soules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therfore (saieth the LORDE) I wil surely anege, and receave vnto me all the innocét bloude from amonge them.
${ }^{5}$ Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of shepe to be slayne, I wil not suffre them now to dwel in Egipte, but wyl brynge them out with a mightie hande and a stretched out arme, and smyte it with plages as afore, and wyl destroye all the londe off it. Egipte shal mourne, and the foundacions of it shalbe smytten with the plage and punyshment, $\stackrel{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ God shal brynge rpon it.

They that tyll $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ groūde, shal mourne, for their sedes shal be destroyed thorow the blastinge and hale, and an horrible starre. Wo worth $\dot{y}$ worlde and them that dwell therin, for $\hat{y}$ swerde a their destruceiō draweth nye: $\tau$ one people shal stōde yp to fight against another, a swerdes in their hādes. For mē shalbe mstedfast, and some shal do violence minto other: they shal not regarde their kynge and prynces, the wayes of their doinges and hādelinges in their power. A man shal desyre to go in to the cite, a shal not be able. For beeause of their pryde ${ }^{\dot{8}}$ cities shalbe brought in feare, $\dot{y}$ houses shal shake, and men shalbe afrayed. A man shal have no pitie rpon his neghboure, but one shal prouoke another vnto battayll, to spoyle their goodes because of the honger of bred, and because of the greate trouble.
Beholde, I gather I call together all the kynges of $\frac{\circ}{y}$ earth which are from the vprysinge, from the south, from the east and Liba-

- Apo. 6. b. and 19. a.

Inus to turne vnto them, and restore the thinges that they haue gene them. Like as they do yet this daye mito my chosen, so wil I do also, and reeopense the in their bosome. Thus sayeth 8 LORDE God: My right hande shal not spare $\dot{y}$ synners, and my swerde shal not ceasse oner them, that shed the innocet bloude vpon earth. 'The feare is gone out frō his wrath, and hath cōsumed the foundacions of the earth, and the synners like the strawe that is kindled. Wo worth them that synne, and kepe not my commaundementes, saieth the LORDE. I wil not spare them. Go youre waye ye children from violence, defyle not my Sanctuary: for the LORDE knoweth all the that symne agaynst him, and therfore delyuereth he them vinto death and destruccio : For now are the plages come vpon the worlde, a ye shal remayne in thē. For God shal not delyuer you, because ye haue synned agaynst him.

Beholde, an horrible vision commeth frō the east, where generacions of Dragons shal come out, and the people of the Arabes with many charettes, and the multitude of them shalbe as the wynde vpo earth, that all they which heare them ragynge in their wrath, maye feare and be afrayed: and as the wylde bores out of y wod, so shal they go out, and with greate power shal they come, and stonde fightinge with the, and shal waist the porcion of the londe of the Assirians.

And then shal the Dragons haue the vpper hande, not remembringe their byrth, and shal turne aboute swearinge together in greate power, to persecute them. But these shalbe afrayed, and kepe sylence at their power, and shal fle: and one out of the londe of the Assirians shal besege thé, and consume one of the , and in their hoost shal be feare and drede, and strife amonge their kynges.

Beholde cloudes from the east, and from the north rnto the south, and they are very horrible to loke vpon, full of wrath and storme. They shal smyte one vpon another, and they shal smyte at $\dot{y}$ greate starre tpon earth and their starre, and the bloude shalbe from the swerde vnto the bely, and the smoke of má vnto $y$ Camels lytter: And there shalbe greate fearfulnes and tremblinge vpō earth, and they that se the wrath, shal be afrayed, and a tremblinge shal come vpon them.

- Psal. 43. c. Rom. 8. c. 1 Co. 4. b.

And then shal there come greate raynes from y south and from the north, and parte from the west, and from the stormy wynde from the east, and shal shutt them vp agayne, © the cloude which he raysed yp in wrath, and the starre to cause feare towarde $\hat{y}$ east and west wynde, shalbe destroyed, if the greate cloudes shalbe lift vp, and $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ mightie cloudes full of wrath, and the starre, that they maye make all the earth afrayed and the $\overline{\mathrm{e}} \mathrm{f} \mathrm{f}$ dwell therin, and that they maye poure ont ouer all places an horrible starre, fyre and hale and flyenge swerdes, and many waters: $\dot{y}$ all feldes maye be full, and all ryuers, $\pi$ they shal breake downe the cities at walles, mountaynes a hylles, all trees, wod, and the grasse of the medowes, and all their frute. And they shal go stedfast vnto Babilon, and make her afrayed, they shal come to her and besege her: the starre and all wrath shal they poure out vpon her.

Then shal the dust and smoke go vp vnto the heauen, and all they that be aboute her, shal bewayle her: and they that remayne vnder her, shal do seruyce vnto them that haue put her in feare. And thou Asia $\frac{t}{y}$ cōfortest thyself also vpo the hope of Babilon, and art a worshipe of hir personne: Wo be vnto the thou wretch, because thou hast made thyself like vnto her, a hast decte $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ daughters i whordome, that they might tryumphe and please thy louers, which haue allwaye desyred to comytte whordome with the: thou hast folowed the abhominable cite in all hir workes and invencions.

Therfore sayeth God: I wyl sende plages vpon the, wyddowhode, pouerte, hōger, warres, and pestilence, to waist thy houses with destruccion and death, and the glory of thy power shal be dryed vp as a floure, whan $\dot{\hat{y}}$ heate aryseth $\frac{t}{y}$ is sent ouer the. Thou shalt be siek as a poore wife that is plaged a beate of wemen: so $\frac{t}{y}$ the mightie and louers shal not be able to receaue the. Wolde I so hate the saieth the LORDE? If thou haddest not allwaye slayne my chosen, exaltinge the stroke of thy handes, and sayde ouer their death, whan thou wast dronk $\overline{\mathrm{e}}$ : set forth the bewtye of thy countenaunce.

The rewarde of thy whordome shalbe recompensed the in thy bosome, therfore shalt thou receaue * rewarde.

* Some rede, no rewarde.

Like as thou hast done mito my chosen ${ }^{\text {B }}$ (sayeth the LORDE) euen so shal God do vnto the, and shal delyuer the in to the plage. Thy childre shal dye of honger, $\tau$ thou shalt fall thorow y swerde. Thy cities shalbe broken downe, a all thine shal perish with the swerde in $\dot{y}$ felde. They $\dot{y}$ be in $\dot{y}$ mountaynes shal dye of honger, a eate their owne flesh, a drinke their owne bloude for very hōger of bred and thyrst of water. Thou vnhappie shalt come thorow the see, a receaue plages agayne.

In the passage they shal caste downe the slayne cite, a shal rote out one parte of $\dot{y}$ londe, $\pi$ cōsume the porcion of thy glory. They shal treade the downe like stuble, a they shalbe thy fyre and shal consume the: thy eities and thy londe, thy wod and thy frutefull trees shal they burne yp with the fyre. Thy children shal they cary awaye eaptyue, and loke what thou hast, they shal spoyle it, and marre the bewtie of thy face.

The roti. Cbapter.

wO wnto the Babilon $\pi$ Asia, wo vnto $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ Egipte $\pi$ Syria: gyrde youre selues with clothes of sack $\pi$ hayre, and mourne for youre childrè, be sory, for youre destruccion is at honde. A swerde is sent vpon you, a who wil turne it back? A fyre is kyndled amōge you, त who wil quench it? Plages are sent vnto you, $\pi$ what is he that wyl dryue them awaye? Maye eny man dryue awaye an hogrie lyon in the wod? Or maye eny mā quench the fyre in the stubble, whan it hath begonne to burne? Maye one turne agayne the arowe, $\dot{y}$ is shot of a stronge areher? The mightie LORDE sendeth the plages, a what is he that wil dryue them awaye? The fyre is kyndled $\tau$ gone forth in his wrath, and what is he that will quench it? He shall cast lightenynges, and who shal not feare? He shal thonder, and who shall not be afrayed? The LORDE shal threaten, and who shal not vtterly be beaten to poulder at his presence? The earth quaketh, at the foundacions therof: $\dot{y}$ y see aryseth up with wawes from the depe, and the floudes of it are inquyete, $\tau$ the fishes therof also before the LORDE, $\tau$ before the glory of his power. For stronge is his right hande that holdeth the bowe, his arowes that he shuteth, are sharpe, $\tau$ shall not mysse, whan they begynne to be shot in to $y$ endes of the worlde.

Beholde, $\hat{y}$ plages are sent, $\tau$ shal not turne agayne, tyll they come vpon earth. The fyre is kyndled, a shall not be put out, tyll it consume the fommacions of the earth. Like as an arowe which is shot of a mightie archer, returneth not bacwarde, cuen so $\mathfrak{y}$ plages y shal be sent ypon earth, shal not turne agayne. Wo is me, wo is me, who wyl delyuer me in those dayes? The begymynge of sorowes a greate nourninge: the begymnynge of derth a greate death: the begynnynge of warres, a the powers shal stonde in feare: the begynnynge of euels, they shal tremble euery one. What shal I do in these thinges, whan the plages come? Beholde, hōger and plage, trouble a anguysh are sent, as scourges for amendement. But for all these thinges they shal not turne frō their wickednesses, ner be allwaye myndefull of $\stackrel{8}{y}$ scourges.

Beholde, vitayles shalbe so good cheape ypon earth, $\dot{y}$ they shal thinke them selues to be in good case: and euen then shal myschefe growe pó earth, warres, derth a greate disquietnes. For many of them that dwell vpo earth shall perish of hoger, at the other that escape the honger, shal the swerde destroye: t the deed shalbe cast out as donge, a there shalbe no man to coforte them. For y earth shalbe waisted, a the cities shalbe east downe: there shalbe no man left to tyll $\hat{\mathrm{y}}$ earth © to sowe it. The trees shal geve frute, a who shal plucke the of a gather them? The grapes shal be ripe, t who shal treade the ? For all places shalbe desolate of me, so that one man shal desyre to se another, or to heare his voyce. For of one whole cite there shalbe ten left, $\pi$ two in the felde, which shall hyde the selues in the thicke buszshes, a in the clyiffes of stones: like as whan there remayne thre or foure olyues vpon the olyue tre, or as whan a rynyarde is gathered, there are left some grapes, of them that diligetly sought thorow the vynyarde.

Euen so in those dayes there shalbe thre or foure left, for the ${ }^{t}$ seareh their houses with the swerte. And the earth shalbe left waiste, a the felles therof shall wase olde: and hir wayes and all hir pathes shal growe full of thomes, because no man shal trauayle there thorow. The daughters shal mourne, hauinge no brydegromes: the wemen shal make lamentacion, hauynge no huszbandes, their daughters shal mourne, hauinge no helpe of their brydegrome. In the warres shall they be destroyed, $\pi$ their huszbandes shal perish of honger. O ye seruauntes of the LORDE, heare these thinges, $\pi$ marck thē. Beholde, the worde of the LORDE, O receaue it: beholde, the plages drawe nye, a are not slack in tarienge. Like as a trauayliuge woman, which after $\hat{y}$ ix. moneth brigeth forth a some, whan the houre of the byrth is come, an houre two or thre afore that the paynes eome poo hir body, a whan the childe cometh to the byrth, they tary not the twincklynge of an eye: Eue so shall not $\dot{y}$ plages be slack to come vpon earth, it the worlde shal mourne, a sorowes shal come vpō it on euery syde.

O my people, heare my worde, make you理 redy to the battayll: © in all euell be euen as pylgrems vpon earth. He $\frac{t}{y}$ selleth, let him be as he that flyeth his waye: $\pi$ he $\frac{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ byeth, as one that wil lese. ${ }^{\text {a }}$ Who so oceupieth marchaüdies, as he that wynneth not: $\tau$ he that buyldeth, as he that shall not dwell therin : he that soweth, as one $\frac{\mathfrak{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ shal not reape: he that twysteth the vynyarde, as he that shal not gather the grapes: they that mary, as they that shall get no children: and they $\frac{t}{y}$ mary not, as the wyddowes: ${ }^{b} \pi$ therfore they $\stackrel{ \pm}{y}$ laboure, laboure in vayne. For straungers shall reape their frutes, a spoyle their goodes, ouer throwe their houses, ז take their childrē captyue, for in eaptiuyte a honger shal they get children. And they that occupie their marehaundies with robbery, how longe decke they their cities, their houses, their possessions a personnes? the more wil I punysh them for their symes, sayeth the LORDE. Like as an whore enuyeth an honest woman, so shall righteousnes hate iniquyte, whan she decketh hir self, and shall aceuse her to hir face, whan he cometh that defendeth, which shal make inquysiciō for all syme roo earth. And therfore be not ye like there into, ner to the workes therof: for or ener it be longe, iniquite shalbe taken awaye out of the earth, and righteousnes shal raigne amonge you.

Let not the symner saye, that he hath not symmed: for coles of fyre shal burne rpon his heade, which saieth before the LORDE God a his glory: 1 have not synned. Beholde, the LORDE knoweth all $\hat{y}$ workes of men, their ymaginacions, their thoughtes a their hertes. For he spake but the worde: ${ }^{a}$ let the earth be made, ©t it was made: let the heaue be made, and it was made. In his worde were y starres made, © he knoweth the nombre of them. He searcheth the grounde of the depe, a the treasures therof: he hath measured the see, and what it conteyneth. He hath shut the see in the myddest of the waters, and with his worde hath he hanged the earth vpon the waters. He spredeth out the heanen like a vowte, vpon the waters hath he founded it. In the deserte and drye wyldernes hath he made sprynges of water, and poles vō the toppe of the mountaynes, $\frac{t}{y}$ the floudes might poure downe from $\stackrel{\text { y }}{ }$ stony rockes to water the earth. He made man, and put his hert in the myddest of $\mathfrak{y}$ body, and gaue him breth, life and vaderstandinge, yee and the sprete of $\hat{y}$ Allmightie God, which made all thinges, and hath searched the groude of all the seeretes of the earth.

He knoweth youre ymaginacions a inuc̄cions, and what ye thynke whan ye synne, a wolde hyde youre synnes. Therfore hath $\dot{y}$ LORDE searehed and sought out all youre workes, and he shal bewraye you all. And whan goure synnes are brought forth, ye shalbe ashamed before men, and youre owne synnes shalbe youre aceusers in that daye. What wil ye do? Or how will ye hyde youre synnes before God and his angels? Beholde, God himself is the iudge, feare him, leaue of from [^828]youre synnes, and forget youre mrighteousnesses, and medle nomore with them : so shal God lede you forth, and delyuer you from all trouble. For beholde, the heate of a greate multitude is kyndled ouer you, and they shal take awaye certayne of you, and fede the ydle with Idols: and they that cōsent vito them, shal be had in derision, laughed to seorne, a trodden vader fote.

For vito the places there shalbe a place, and in the next cities a greate insurreccion ypon those that feare $y$ LORDE. They shal be like mad men, they shall spare no man: they shall spoyle and waist soch as feare the LORDE, their goodes shall they take from them, and shute them out of their houses. Then shall it be knowne who are my chosen, a they shalbe tryed as the golde in the fyre. Heare O ye my beloued, saieth the LORDE: beholde, the dayes of trouble are at honde, but I wil delyuer you from the same. Be not ye afraied, dispayre not, for God is youre eaptayne.

Who so kepeth my commaundementes and preceptes (sayeth the LORDE God) let not youre synnes weye you downe, a let not youre vmighteousnesses be lift vp. Wo be vnto the that are subdued vnto their synnes, and tangled in their wiekednesses: like as a felde is hedged in with buszshes, and the path therof couered with thornes, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ no man maye trauayle thorow : and so is he taken, and cast in the fyre, and brent.

all in the trybe of Nephtali, yet dyd not he behaue himself childeshly in his workes. And whan all the other wente to the golde calues, which ${ }^{a}$ Ieroboam the kynge of Israel had made, he himself alone fled all their companies, and gat him to Ierusalem vnto the temple of the LORDE, and there worshipped $\dot{y}$ LORDE God of Israel, ${ }^{6}$ faithfully offeringe all his first frutes and tithes, so that in the thirde yeare he ministred all the tithes vnto the straungers and conuertes. These and soch like thinges dyd he acordinge to the lawe of God, whan he was yet but yonge. owne trybe ${ }^{c}$ a wyfe called Anna, and of her he begat a sonne, whom he called after his owne name, and taught him from his youth vp , to feare God, and to refraine from all synne.

Now whan he with his wife, his sonne and with all his kynred was come in captiuite onto Niniue, what tyme as they all ate of the meates of the Heithe, he ${ }^{d}$ kepte his soule, and was neuer defyled in their meates. And for so moch as he was myndefull of the LORDE in all his hert, God gaue him fauoure ${ }^{e}$ in the presence of Salmanasar the kynge, which gaue him power to go where he wolde, and so had he liberte to do what him list.

So wente Tobias vuto all them that were in preson, ${ }^{f}$ and comforted them, and gave them wholsome exortacions. And whan he came to Rages a cite of the Medes, hauynge * ten talētes of syluer (of $\dot{y}$ thinges wherwith the kynge had honoured him) and sawe amonge a greate company of people of his kinred, one Gabelus (which was of his owne trybe) beynge in necessite, he gaue him the sayde weight of syluer under an handwritinge.

After a longe season whan Salmanasar the kynge was deed, and Sennacherib his sonne reigned in his steade, which hated the children of Israel, Tobias wente daylie thorow out all his kynred, and comforted them, and gaue of his goodes to euery one of the , as moch as he might: he fed the hongrie, clothed the naked, and buried the deed and slaine, and that diligently.
And whan Sennacherib the kynge came agayne and fled out of lewry, (what tyme as God punyshed him for his blasphemy) $\mathfrak{i n}$

[^829]his wrath slew many of the children of Israel, Tobias buried their bodies. ${ }^{\text {b }}$ But whan it was tolde the kynge, he commaunded to slaye him, and toke awaye all his goodes. Neuertheles Tobias with his sonne © with his wife fled his waye, and was hyd naked, for there were many that loued him. But after xlv. dayes the kynge was slayne of his owne sonnes. Then came Tobias againe to his house, and all his goodes were restored vnto him.

AFTER these thinges vpon a solempne daye of the LORDE Tobias made a good feast in his house, a sayde vnto his sonne: Go y waye a brynge hither some of oure trybe, soch as feare God, that they maye make mery with vs. And whā he was gone, he came agayne, and tolde his father, that one of the children of Israel laye slayne vpon the strete. And immediatly he leape from his table, left the feast, came fastinge to the deed coarse, toke him t bare him preuely in to his house, $\stackrel{\dot{y}}{\mathrm{y}}$ whan the Sonne was downe, he might safely burye him. And wha he had hyd the coarse, he ate his meate with mournynge and feare, remembrynge $y$ wordes, that the LORDE sayeth by the prophet Amos: 'youre hye feastes shalbe turned to sorowe and heuynes.

But whan $\dot{y}$ Sonne was downe, he wente his waye a buried lim. Then all his neghbours reproued him, sayenge: It is not loge, sens it was commaunded to slaye the ${ }^{k}$ because of this matter, and hast searce escaped the daunger of death, and buriest thou the deed againe? Neuertheles Tobias fearinge God more then the kynge, toke the bodies of the slayne, hyd them in his house, $\frac{5}{}$ buried them at mydnight.

It happened ypō a daye, that he had buried ẙ deed, $\tau$ was weery, came home, a layed him downe by the wall a slepte. And whyle he was a slepe, there fell downe rpō his eyes warme donge out of the swalowes nest, so ${ }^{t}$ the was blynde. 'This tentacion dyd God suffre to happen vnto him, that they which came after, might hate an example of his paciece, like as of holy Iob. For in so moch as he euer feared God from his youth vp, a kepte his commaundementes, he was not heuy [^830]against God, that the plage of blyndnes chañed vuto him, but remayned stedfast in the feare of Gol, and thanked God all the dayes of his life.

For like as blessed Iob was had in derision of kynges, enen so was he langhed to scome of his elders a kynsfolkes, which sayde vato him: "where is thy hope, for $\hat{y}$ which thou hast done allmes and buried the deed? But Tohias rebuked thē, a spake: Saye not so, for we are the children of holy men, ${ }^{b}$ a loke for the life, which Cood shal geue vinto them, that nener turne their beleue from him. Anna his wife wente daylie to the weeuynge worke, a loke what lyuinge she coude get ${ }^{\text {c }}$ with the laboure of lir handes, she brought it. And it happened $\frac{t}{y}$ she toke a kyd and brought it home.

And whan hir huszband berd it crie, he sayde: loke $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ it be not stollen, ${ }^{d}$ restore it agayne to the owners: for it is not laufull for vs , to eate or to touch eny thinge of theft. Then was his wife angrie, and sayde: ${ }^{e}$ Now is thy hope become vayne openly, © thy allmes dedes are manifest. With these a soch like wordes dyd she cast him in the tethe.

Wilt thou slay me also, as thou hast slayne seuen men? At this voyce wète Sara in to an hye chamber of hir house, and thre dayes and thre nightes she nether ate ner drike, but eōtynued in prayer, and besought God with teares, that he wolde delyuer her from this rebuke.
$V_{\text {pon }}$ the thirde daye it chaunced, that whan she had made an ende of hir prayer, she praysed the LORDE, sayenge: Blessed be thy name O God of oure fathers, which whan thou art wroth, shewest mercy, and in the tyme of trouble thou forgeuest the symnes of them, that eall vpon the. Thē thought Tobias vpon the wordes of the angell, and toke out of his bagg a pece of the lener of the fish, and layed it vpon the hote coales. So the angell Raphael toke holde of the deuell, and sent him awaye, aud bounde him in the wyldernes of the hyer Egipte. The spake Tobias vnto the virgin, and sayde: Vp Sara, let vs make oure 'prayer unto God to daye, tomorow, and ouermorow: for these thre nightes wil we reconcyle oure selues with Gool : and whan the thirde holy night is past, we shall ioyne together in $y$ deutye of mariage. Then stode they yp both together, and besought God earnestly, ${ }^{\prime} \dot{\mathrm{t}}$ he wolde preserue them. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of oure fathers, praysed be thou of heaue a earth of the see, welles, $九$ floudes, $s$ of all the creatures that be therin. And now LORDE thou knowest that it is not because of volupthousnes, that I take this sister of myne to wyfe, but onely for the loue of children, in whom thy name be blessed for euer. And Sara sayde: haue mercy vpon vs (O LORDE) hane mercy vpon vs, and let vs both come whole and sounde to a good age. aboute the eocke erowe, it happened, that Raguel called his seruauntes, and they wēte with him, to make a graue. For he sayde: it is chaunced vnto him peraduēture, as it dyd vnto the other seuen men, that wente in mnto her. Now wha they had made the graue, Raguel came agayne to his wyfe, and sayde vito her: sende one of thy maydess, to loke yf he be deed, that I maye burye him afore it be light daye.

So she sent a mayden to se, which whan she came in to the chamber, she founde them whole and sounde, slepynge together. And so she came agayne, a brought good tydinges. LORDE, and sayde: Praysed be thou o LORDE God of Israel, For it is not happened vnto vs, as we thought. For thou hast dealte mercifully with vs, and put awaye from vs the enomye that persecuted vs, and hast shewed mercy vnto yonder two beloned. O LORDE, cause the to magnifie the more perfectly, and to offre the the sacrifice of thy prayse, and of their health: that all people maye knowe, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thou onely art God in all the earth.

And immediatly Raguel commaunded his seruauntes, to fyll the grane, that they had made, with earth, afore it was light: and bade his wife prepare a feast, a to make ready all thinges that were necessary for meate, to soch as wente by $\dot{y}$ waye. He cansed two fatt kyne also and foure wethers to be slayne, Ts meates to be prepared for all his neghbours and frendes.

And Raguel charged Tobias, to remayne with him two wekes. As for all the good $\dot{y}^{t}$ he had, he gave Tobias $y$ one half of it, and made his wrytinge, that the balf which remayned, shulde fall vito Tobias after their death.

${ }^{2}$ T HEN Tobias ealled vnto him the angell, whom he thought to haue bene a man, and sayde vito him. Brother Azarias, I praye the herke vato my wordes: Yf I shulde gene myself to be $\dot{y}$ seruaunt, I shal not deserue y prouydence. Neuertheles I beseke the, that thou wylt take the beastes and the seruauntes, and go vnto Gabelus in Rages the cite of the Meedes, and delyuer him his handwrytinge, and receaue the money of him, and praye him to come to my mariage. For thou knowest thyself, that my father telleth $\dot{y}$ dayes: and yf I tary one daye to longe, he wyl be sory in his mynde. Now seist thou how earnestly Raguel hath requyred me, so that I can not saye him nay.

Then toke Raphael foure of Raguels seruauntes, and two Camels, © wente unto Rages the eite of the Medes: and whan he had founde Gabelus, he gave him his handwrytynge, a receaued all $\dot{y}$ money. He tolde him also of Tobias $\mathfrak{y}$ sonne of Toby, how all thiges had happened, a caused him to come with him to y mariage. Now whan he came in to the house of Raguel, he foüde Tobias syttinge at y table: a he leape vp, a they kyssed one another, and Gabelus wepte, and praysed God, and sayde: the blessynge of the God of Israel haue thou, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ for thou art the sonne of a right verteous $\mathfrak{t}$ iust man, $\mathfrak{c}$ of one ỳ feareth God, a geueth greate allmes. And blessynge haue $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ wife, and youre elders, that ye maye se youre children, and youre childers childre, vnto the thirde and fourth generaciō, and that youre sede maye be blessed of y God of Israel, which reigneth worlde without ende. And whan they all had sayde Amen, they wente to the feast, but with the feare of the LORDE helde they the feast of the mariage.

NOW whyle yöge Tobias made lōge $\boldsymbol{a}$ tarienge by reason of y mariage, his father was full of care and heurnes, and thought: what shulde be the cause, that my sonne tarieth so longe? Or why shulde he be kepte so longe there? Peraduenture Gabelus is dced, and no man wyl geue him the money. Thus begane he to be very soroufull, he a Anna his wife with him, a beganue to wepe both together, because their sonne was not come agayne vnto them at the daye appoynted. As for his mother, she wepte with discomfortable teares, and sayde: Wo is me, my sonne: Ob what ayled vs to sende the awaye into a straunge comntre, thou light of oure eyes, thou staff of oure age, thou comforte of oure life, ${ }^{a}$ thou hope of oure generacion? Seinge all y thinges that we haue are onely in the, we shulde not have sent the awaye from vs.

Then Tobias comforted her, and sayde: holde thy tonge, and be not discomforted, oure sonne is whole and sounde: the man $\frac{t}{y}$ we sent him withall, is faithfull ynough. Neuertheles she might in no wyse be coforted: but daylie wente out, loked aboute, and wente aboute all the stretes, wherby she thought he shulde come againe: that (yf it were possible) she might se him cōmynge afarre of.

But Raguel saide vnto his sonne i lawe: O tary here, and I shall sende a messaūger vnto thy father Tobias, to tell him $\dot{f}$ thou art in good health. Tobias sayde vnto him: I am sure, that my father and my mother counte euery daye, and that their hertes are sory.
So whan Raguel prayed Tobias with many wordes, the wolde in no wyse heare him, he delyuered Sara vnto him, a the half parte of all his good: in seruauntes and handmaydēs, in shepe, in camels, and in kyne and moch money, and so sent him awaye from him with peace and ioye, and sayde: The holy angell of the LORDE be with you in youre iourney, and brynge you forth safe a sounde, that ye maye fynde all thinges in good case with youre elders, and that myne eyes maye se youre children, afore I dye.

So the elders enbraced their daughter, kyssed her, and let her go, exortinge her to honoure hir father and mother in lawe, to loue hir huszbande, to rule well hir huszsholde, to kepe hir house in good ordre, and to shew hir self fautlesse.

NOW as they were goinge homewarde againe, vpon $\dot{y}$ xj. daye they came to Charra, which lyeth in the half waye towarde Niniue. And the angell sayde : Brother Tobias, thou knowest how thou hast left thy father: therfore yf it please the, we two wyll go before, and let the husholde with thy wife and $\hat{y}$ catell come soft $\mathbb{T}$ fayrly after vs. And whan Tobias was content that they shulde go before, Raphael sayde vnto him: Take of the gall of the fish with the, for it shal be neces-

[^833]sary. So Tobias toke of the gall, and they wente their waye. But Ama the mother of Tobias sat daylie by the waye syde vpon ${ }^{\circ}$ toppe of an hill, from whence she might se farre aboute her.

And whyle she was waytinge there for his comynge, she loked afarre of, and anone she perceaued hir sonne comminge, and ranne and tolde hir huszbande, sayenge: beholde, thy sonne commeth. And Raphael sayde vnto Tobias: As soone as thou commest in to the house, immediatly worshipe the LORDE thy God, and geue thankes vnto him: then go to thy father, and kysse him, a strake his eyēs ouer with the gall of $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ fish, that thou hast brought with the. For be sure, that his eyes shal straight waye be opened, and thy father shal se the light of heauen, and shal reioyse at the sight of the. Then the dogg that had bene with them in their iourney, rāne before, and came as a messaūger, and wagged with his tayle for gladnesse.
so y blynde father arose, and beganne to renne, and stombled with his fete, and gaue a seruaunt his hande, ranne to mete his sonne, receaued him, and kyssed him, he and his wife, and beganne to wepe for ioye.

Now whan they had worshipped a thanked God, they satt downe. Then toke Tobias of the fishes gall, and anoynted his fathers eyes: and taried half an houre, and then beganne the blemysh to go out of his eyes, like as it had bene the whyte szkynne of an egg: which Tobias toke and drew from his eyes, and immediatly he receaued his sight.

Then they praysed God, he and his wife, and all they that knew him. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, I geue the prayse and thankes, for thou hast chastened me, and made me whole. And lo, now do I se my sonne Tobias. After seuen dayes came Sara his sonnes wife also whole and sounde with all $\frac{8}{y}$ housholde and catell, with camels and moch money of his wyues, and with the money that he had receaued of Gabelus: and he tolde his father and his mother all the bencfites, which God had done for him, by the man that led him. Achior also and Nabath Tobias sister sonnes came and were glad, a reioysed with him, by reason of all the good that God had shewed vnto him.

And so for $\dot{y}$ space of seuen dayes they made mery, and were right ioyfull euerichone.

ARPHAXAT the kynge of the Medes subdued many people vnto his dominion, a buylded a noble stroge cite, which he called Egbathanis. The walles of it made he of fre stone, foure squared, seuētie cubites hye, and thirtie cubites brode. He made towres therevpon of an hundreth cubites hye. But ypon the foure corners euery syde was twentie fote brode. He made the portes in the heith, like as the towres. This kynge trusted in his mightie hoost, © in his glorious charettes.

So in $\mathfrak{y}$ twolft yeare of his raigne it happened, that Nabuchodonosor $\dot{y}$ kynge of the Assirians (which raigned in the greate cite of Niniue) fought agaynst Arphaxat, and ouercame hī in $\grave{y}$ greate felde called Ragau, besyde Euphrates and Tigris and Iadason in the felde of Erioth the kinge of the Elikes.

Then was the kyngdome of Nabuchodonosor exalted, and his hert was lift vp: " and he sent vnto all them that dwelt in Celicia, in Damascus, in Libanus, and vnto the Heithen that dwelt in Carmel and Cedar, and to soch as dwelt in Galile in the greate felde of Eszdrelo, to all them that were in Samaria, and beyonde the water of Iordane vnto Ierusalem and the whole londe of Iesse vnto the mountaynes of Ethiopia. Vnto all these dyd Nabuchodonosor the kynge of y Assirians sende messaungers. But they all with one consent wolde not agree vnto him, and sent the messaungers agayne emptie, and put the awaye without honoure. Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge toke indignaciō at all those londes, and sware by his trone $\ddagger$ by his kyngdome, that he wolde be auenged of all these countrees.

${ }^{3}$ IN the xiij. yeare of kynge Nabuchodonosor, vpon the xxij. daye of $\frac{8}{y}$ first moneth, it was deuysed in the courte of Nabuchodonosor $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ kynge of the Assiriās, that he wolde defende himself. So he called vnto him all $\dot{y}$ elders, all his captaynes and men of warre, and shewed them his secrete councell, and tolde them, that his purpose was, to brynge the whole earth vnder his domynion. Now whan they were all content with this sayenge, Nabuchodonosor the kinge called Holofernes the chefe captayne of his warres and saide vnto him: Go thy waye forth agaynst all the kyngdomes of the west and specially agaynst those that haue despysed my commaundement. ${ }^{6}$ Thou shalt spare no realme, all stronge cities shalt thou brynge in subieccion vnto me.

Then Holofernes called together all the captaynes $\mathbb{\leftrightarrows}$ rulers of all the power in Assiria, and mustred the soudyers vnto the hoost (like as the kynge commaunded him) namely, an hundreth and twētye thousande fightinge men vpon fote, and twolue thousande archers ypon horsebacke. All his ordinaunce sent he before with an innumerable multitude of camels, so that the hoost was well prouyded for with oxen, and small catell, and $y$ without nombre. He caused corne to be prepared out of all Syria for his hoost. Moch golde and syluer also toke he out of the kynges house. So he toke his iourney, he and all his hoost, with charettes, horsmen, and archers: of whom there were so many, that they couered the grounde of the lande, like the greshoppers.

And whan he was gone past the borders of $\mathfrak{C}$ the Assirians, he came towarde the greate mountaynes of Ange, which lye vpon the left syde of Celicia: and so he wente vp in to all their castels, and wanne euery strōge holde. He went ouer Euphrates also, and came in to Mesopotamia, and brake downe all the hye cities that were there, from the broke of Mambre tyll a man come to the see: and he toke the borders in from Celicia vnto the coastes of Iaphet towarde the south. He caried awaye all the Madianites, and spoyled all their goodes: $\mathbb{T}$ who so euer withstode him, he slew them with the swerde. After this he wente downe in to the felde of Damascus in the tyme of haruest, and brent vp all the corne and all the trees, and caused the vynes to be cutt downe. And the feare of him fell tpon all them that dwelt in $\mathfrak{y}$ earth.

So Holofernes comaunded his seruauntes to take Achior, $\pi$ to cary him vnto Bethulia, and to delyuer him in to the handes of the children of Israel. Then Holofernes seruautes toke him, a wète thorow the playne felde. heade, and put on soch apparell as belongeth muto gladnesse, slippers vpon hir fete, armelettes, spanges, earynges, fynger rynges, and deckte herself with all hir best araye.

The LORDE gaue her also a speciall beutye and fayrnesse (for all this deckinge of hir self was not done for eny volupteousnesse and pleasure of the flesh, but of a right discrecion and vertue, therfore dyd the LORDE increase hir bewtye) so $\frac{t}{y}$ she was exceadinge amyable and welfauoured in all mens eyes. She gaue hir mayde also a bottell of wyne, a pot with oyle, pottage, cakes, bred a chese, and wente hir waye.

Now whan she came to the porte of the cite, she founde Osias and the elders of the cite waitinge there. Which whan they sawe her, they were astonnyed, a marueled greatly at her bewty, neuertheles they axed no question at her, but let her go, sayenge: The God of oure fathers geve $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ his grace, and with his power perfourme all the deuyce of thy hert: that Ierusalem maye reioyse ouer the, and that thy name maye be in the nombre of the holy a righteous. And all they $\frac{t}{y}$ were there, sayde with one royce: so be it, so be it. Iudith made hir prayer vato $\mathfrak{y}$ LORDE, a wente out at $\dot{y}$ porte, she thir mayde.

And as she was goinge downe the mountayne. it happened that aboute the sprynge of the daye, the spyes of $\dot{y}$ Assirians met with her, and toke her, sayenge : whence commest thou? Or whither goest thou? She answered: I am a daughter of $\hat{y}$ Hebrues, and am fled from them, for I knowe, that they shalbe geue vnto you to be spoyled: because they thought scorne to yelde the selues vinto you, that they might fynde merey in youre sight. Therfore haue I deuysed by my self after this maner: I wyll go before the prynce Holofernes, and tell him all their secretes, and wyll shew him, how he maye come by them, and wynne them, so that not one man of his hoost shall perish.

And whan these men had herde hir wordes, x considered hir fayre face, they were astonnyed (for they wondred at hir excellent bewtye) i sayde vato her: Thou hast saued thy life by fyndinge oute this deuyce, $\mathrm{y}^{\text {t }}$ thou woldest come downe to orre lorde: a be thou sure, that whi thou comest unto him, he shal intreate the well. T thou shalt please him at $\dot{y}$ hert. So they brought her in to Holofernes pauylion, and tolde him of her. Now whan she came in before him, immediatly he was ouercome a taken with hir bewtye. Then saide his seruauntes: who wolde despyse $f$ people of $\stackrel{8}{y}$ Iewes, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ haue so fayre wemé Shulde we not by reason fight against the for these? So wha Iudith sawe Holofernes syttinge in a canapye, $\dot{y}$ was wrought of purple, sylke, golde, Smaragde and precious stones, she loked fast rpō him. a fell downe vō the earth. And Holofernes seruaūtes toke hir vp agayne, at their lordes commaundement.

TTHEN sayde Holofernes vnto her: Be of good chere, and feare not in thine hert, for I neuer hurte man, that wolde serue Nabuchodonosor the kynge. As for thy people. yf they had not despysed me, I shulde not haue lift rp a speare agaynst the. But tell me now, what is the cause $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thou art departed from them, and wherfore art thou come into rs?

And Iudith sayde rnto him: Syr, vnderstonde the wordes of thy handmayden: for yf thou wilt do after $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ wordes of thy hādmayden, the LORDE shall brynge thy matter to a prosperous effecte. As truly as Nabuchodonosor a lorde of the londe lyueth, a as truly as his power lyueth, which is in the to the punyshment of all men that go wronge, all men shall not onely be subdued vito him thorow the, but all the beestes also of y felde. For all people speake of thy prudet actiuyte, and it hath euer bene reported, how thou onely art good and mightie in all his kyngdome, and thy discrecion is commēded in all londes.

The thinge is manifest also, that Achior spake, ${ }^{6}$ and it is wel knowne, what thou commañdedst to do vnto him. For this is plaine and of a suretye, that oure God is so wroth with vs (by the reason of oure synnes) that he hath shewed by his prophetes voto the people, how that for their synnes he wyl delyuer them ouer vato the enemie. And for so moch as the children of Israel knowe that they hane so displeased their God, they are sore afrayed of the. They suffre greate honger also, t for wante of water, they are deed now in a maner. Morouer, they are appoynted to slaye all their catell, that they [^838]maye drynke the bloude of them: and are purposed to spende all the holy ormamentes of their God (which he hath forbydde the to touch) for corne, wyne and oyle. Seinge now that they do these thinges, it is a playne case, $\mathbb{C}{ }_{y}^{t}$ they must nedes be destroyed. Which whan I thy handmayden perceaued, I fled from them, and the LORDE hath sent me vito $y$, to shew the these thinges. For I thy handmayden worshipe God euen here now besyde the, and thy honde mayden shal go forth, and I wil make my praier vnto God, and he shal tell me, whan he wyl rewarde the their synne: then shal I come and shew the, a brynge the thorow the myddest of Ierusalem, so that thou shalt have all ${ }^{\circ}$ people of Israel, as the shepe without a shepherde: there shal not so moch as one dogg barck agaynst the, for these thinges are shewed me by the prouydence of God: and for so moch as God is displeased with them, he hath sent me to tell the the same.

These wordes pleased Holofernes and all his seruauntes, which marueled at the wysdome of her, and sayde one to another: there is not soch a woman upon earth, in bewtye and discrecion of wordes. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: God hath done well, that he hath sent the hither hefore thy people, that thou mayest geue them in to oure handes. And for so moch as thy promyse is good, yf thy God perfourme it vinto me, he shatl be my God also, and thou shalt be excellent and greate in the courte of Nabuchodonosor, and thy name shalbe spoken of in all the londe.

THEN commaunded he her to go in, where his treasure laye, and charged that she shulde hane hyr dwellynge there, and appoynted, what shulde be genen her frō his table. Iudith answered him, and sayde: "As for the meate that thou hast commaunded to gene me, I maye not eate of it as now (lest I displease my God) but wyl eate of soch as I hane brought with me. Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Yf these thinges that thou hast brought with the fayle, what shal we do vuto the? And Indith sayde: As truly as thou lyuest my lorde, thy hande mayden shall not spende all this, tyll God haue brought to passe in my hande, the thinges that I have deuysed.

So his seruauntes brought her in to the tent, where as he had appointed. And as she was goinge in, she desyred that she might hane lene to go forth by night a before daye, to hir prayer and to make intercession vito the LORDE. Then commaunded Holofernes his chamberlaynes, that she shulde go out and in at hir pleasure, to praye vito hir God those thre dayes.

And so in the night season she wēte forth in to the valley of Bethulia, and wasszhed hirself in the well water. Then wente she vp, and besought the LORDE God of Israel that he wolde prospere hir waye, for the delyueraunce of his people. And so she wente in, and remayned cleane in hir tent, till she toke hir meate in the euenynge.

Ypon $\underset{y}{ }$ fourth daye it happened, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ Holofernes made a costly supper vnto his seruañtes, and sayde into Vagao his chamberlayne: Go thy waye, and councell this Hebruesse, that she maye be wyllynge to consent to kepe company with me. For it were a shame vnto all the Assirians, that a woman shulde so laugh a man to scorne, that she were come from him vnmedled withall.

Then wente Vagao mnto Iudith, and sayde: Let not the good daughter be afrayed, to come in to my lorde, that she maye be honoured before him, that she maye eate and drynke wyne, and be mery with him. Vnto whom Iudith answered: Who an I, that I shulde saye my lorde naye? what so ener is good before his eyes, I shal do it: and loke what is his pleasure, that shal I thinke well done, as long as I lyue.

So she stode vp, and deckte hirself with hir apparell, and wente in, and stode before him. And Holofernes hert was whole moued, so that he brent in desyre towarde her. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: drynke now and sytt downe, and be mery, for thou hast founde fanoure before me. Then sayde Iudith: Syr, I wil drynke, for my mynde is meryer to daye, than euer it was in all my life. And she toke and ate and dranke before him, the thinges that hir mayden had prepared for her. And Holofernes was mery with her, and dranke more wyne, then euer he dyd afore in his life.
(U) siij. Clanter.

NOW whan it was late in the night, his seruauntes made haist, every mai to his lodginge. And Vagao shutt the chamber dores, and wente his waye, for they were all onerladen with wyne. So was Iudith alone in the chamber. As for Holofernes, he laye ypon the bed all droncken, and of very dronkennes fell a slepe.

Then commaunded Iudith hir mayden, to stōde without before the dore, and to wayte. And Iudith stode before the bed, makyinge her prayer with teares, and moued hir lippes sceretly, and sayde. Strength me O LORDE God of Isracl, and haue respecte vato the workes of my handes in this houre, that thou mayest set ip thy cite of Ierusalem, like as thou hast promysed: O graunte that by the I maye perfourme the thinge, which I haue deuysed thorow the beleue that I haue in the.

And whan she had spoken this, she wente to the bedsteade, and lowsed the swerde that hanged vpon it, and drew it out. Then toke she holde of the hairie lockes of his heade, and sayde: Strength me o LORDE God in this houre, and with that, she gane him two strokes tpon the neck, and smote of his heade. Then toke she the canapy awaye, and rolled the deed body asyde. Immediatly she gat her forth, and delyuered the head of Holofernes vnto hir mayden, and bad hir put it in hir walett.

And so these two wente forth together after their custome, as though they wolde praye, and so passed by the hoost, and came thorow the valley vnto the porte of the cite. And Iudith cried afarre of vato $\dot{y}$ watchmen vpon the walles: Open the gates (sayde she) for God is with vs, which hath shewed his power in lsrael. And whan they herde hir voyce. they called the elders of the cite together. And they came all to mete her, litle $\pi$ greate, yonge t olde, for they thought not that she shulde haue come so soone. So they lighted candels, and gathered aboute hir euerichone: but she wente vp in to an hye place, and calused sylence to be proclamed.

- Whan euery man now helde his tonge, ludith sayde: O prayse the LORDE oure (iont, for he hath not despysed, ner forsaken them, that put their trust in him : and in me his honde mayden he hath perfonmed his mercy, which he promysed vnto the house of Israel: yee in my hade this same night hath he slayne the enemy of his people.

And with that she toke forth the heade of Holofernes out of the walett, and shewed it them, sayenge: Beholde the heade of Holofernes the captayne of the Assiriās, and this is the canapy, wherin he laye in his dronkennes: where the LORDE oure God hath slayne him by the hande of a woman.

But as truly as the LORDE 'lyueth, his angell hath kepte me, goinge thither, remayninge there, and commynge hither agayne from thence. And the LORDE hath not suffred me his handmayden to be defyled, but without eny fylthynes of synne hath he brought me agayne vnto you: © ${ }^{\text {y }}$ with greate victory, so that I am escaped, and ye delyuered. O geue thankes rnto him euerschone, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. ${ }^{\text {b }}$

So they praysed the LORDE alltogether, and gaue thākes vnto him. And to her they sayde: The LORDE hath blessed the in his power, for thorow the he hath brought oure enemies to naught.

And Ozias $\frac{8}{y}$ chefe ruler of the people of Isracl, sayde vito her: Blessed art thou of the LORDE the hye God, aboue all wemen ypon earth.

Blessed be the LORDE the maker of heauen and earth, which hath gyded y a right to wounde and to smyte of the heade of the captayne of oure enemies. For this daye he hath made thy name so honorable, that thy prayse shall neuer come out of the mouth of mé, which shal all waye remembre $\dot{y}$ power of the LORDE: seinge thou hast not spared thine owne self, but put the in ieoperdy, consideringe the anguysh and trouble of thy people, and so hast helped their fall before God oure LORDE. And all the people sayde: Amē, Amen.

Achior also was called, t he came. Then 五 sayde Iudith vuto him: The God of Israel vnto who thou gauest wytnes, that he wolde be anenged of his enemies, enen he hath this night thorow my hande smytte of the head of all the rnfaithfull. And that thou marest se that it so is, beholde, this is y heade of Holofernes, which in his presumptuous pryde despysed the God of the people of Israel, and threatened $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ with destruccion, sayenge : ${ }^{\text {a }}$ whan the people of Israel is take I I shall cause the also to be stickte with the swerde. Whan Achior sawe Holofernes heade, he fell downe vpon his face to the grounde for very anguish a feare, so $\frac{t}{y}$ he swowned withall. But after that he was come agayne to himself, he fell downe before her a praysed her, sayege: Blessed art thou of thy God in all the tabernacles of Iacob: for all the people that heare of thy name, shall prayse the God of Israel because of the.

IUDITH saide vnto all the people: Brethren heare me, Styck vp this heade upon oure walles, and whan the Sonne aryseth, take euery man his weapen, and fall out violently: not as though ye wolde go besyde them, but to remne vpon them with violence. Whan the spyes in the tētes se this, they shall of necessite be copelled to fle bacwarde, and to rayse ip their captayne to the battyll. So whit their captaynes come in to Holofernes pauylion, and fynde the deed body wrapped in the bloude, fearfulnes shall fall vpon them: and whan ye perceaue that they fle, folowe them without all care, for God shal delyuer them vato you, to be destroyed.

Then Achior seynge the power of God which he had shewed mito the people of Israel, fell of from his Heithenish beleue, and put his trust in God, and let him self be circumcided: and so was he nombred amonge the people of Israel, he and all his posterite vnto this daye.

Now as soone as it was daye, they stickte vp Holofernes heade vpon the walles, and euery man toke his weapen, and so they wente out with an horrible crye. Whan the spyes sawe that, they rame vnto Holofernes tent. And they that were within the tēt, came before his chamber, and made a greate russzhinge to wake him vp, because they thought with the noyse to haue raised him. For there durst not one of the Assirians knocke, go in, ner to open.

But whan the captaynes and prynces and all the chefe in the kynge of the Assirians hoost came together, they saide vnto the chamberlaynes: Go youre waye in, and wake him vp, for the myse are crepte out of their holes, ${ }^{6}$ and darre prouoke vs vnto battayll.

Then wente Vagao in to his chamber, stode before the bed, and clapped with his handes, for he thought he had bene slepynge with Iudith.

But whī he had herkened perfectly with his eares, and coude perceaue no sterynge, he wente nyer to the bed, and lift it vp, and then sawe he the deed body of Holofernes lyenge there without a heade, weltred in his bloude von the earth. Then cried he with loude voyce, and with wepynge rent his clothes, and wente in to ludiths tent, and founde her not: And so he leapte out vnto the people, and sayde: one womā of $\mathfrak{y}$ lewes, hath brought all Nabuchodonosors people to shame.

For lo, Holofernes lyeth vpon the grounde, and hath no heade.

Whan the chefe of the assirians hoost herde that, they rente their clothes, and there fell an intollerable feare and tremblinge ypo them, so $\frac{t}{y}$ theyr myndes were sore afrayed. And there was an exceadynge greate crye in the whole hoost.

©lye rb. (Clyapter.

NOW whan all the hoost herde that Holofernes was headed, their mynde and councell fell from them: and soch a feare came vpon them, that they vudertoke to defende them selues by flyenge awaye: one spake not to another, but hanged downe their heades, left all behynde them, and made haist to escape from the Hebrues: for they herde, that they were haistinge to come after with their weapens, and so they fled by the wayes of the feldes, and thorow all the fote pathes of the dales.

And whan $\stackrel{y}{y}$ children of Israel sawe that they fled, they folowed vpon them, and wente downe with tropettes, blowinge and makynge a greate crie after the. As for the Assirians, they had no ordre, and kepte not the selnes together, but fled their waye. Neuerthelesse the children of Israel fell vpon them with one company and ordre, and discomfited as many as they might gett. And Osias sent messaungers vnto all the cities and countrees of Israel.

So all the regions and euery cite sent out their best men after them in harnesse, $\tau$ smote them with the swerde, tyll they came to $\ddot{y}$ vttemost parte of their borders. And the other that were in Bethulia eame in to the tetes of the Assirians, and toke all that they which were fled, had left behynde them, and so they fomde greate grod. And they that came agayne to Bethulia from the battayll, toke with them soeh thinges as had bene theirs: there was no nobre of the eatell, and of all costly lewels, so that from the lowest mito the hyest, they were all made riche of the spoyles of them. And Ioachim the Hye prest at Ierusale, came to Bethulia with all the elders, that they might se Iudith.

Now whan she came out vuto them, they beganne all to prayse her with one voyce, sayenge: thou worshipe of the cite of Ierusalem, thou ioye of Israel, thou honoure of oure people, thou hast done manly, and thy hert is comforted, beeause thon hast loned clenlynes and chastyte, a hast knowne no man but thine owne huszbande: therfore hath the hide of the LORDE comforted the, and blessed shalt thou be for euer. And all people sayde : so be it, so be it.

In thirtie dayes coude the people of Israel scarse gather vp the spoyles of the Assirians. But all that belonged vnto Holofernes, and had bene his specially, (whether it were of golde, of syluer, precious stones, clothinge and all ornamentes) they gaue it vnto Iudith. And all the people reioysed, both wemen, maydens, and yonge people, with pipes and harpes.

${ }^{2}$ THEN sange Iudith this songe mato the LORDE: Begynne vnto the LORDE ypon the tabrettes, singe vito the LORDE vpon the eymbals. $O$ synge vito him a new songe of thankesgeuynge, be ioyfull and call vpon his name. ${ }^{a}$ It is the LORDE that destroyeth warres, euen the LORDE is his name. Which hath pitched his tentes in the myddest of his people, that he might delyuer vs from the hande of all oure enemies. Assur came out of the mountaynes in the multitude of his strength. His people stopped the water brokes, ${ }^{b}$ and their horses couered the valleys.

[^839]He purposed to hane brēt vp my londe, and to slaye my yonge men with the swerde.

He wolde haue caryed awaye my children $\quad 3$ and virgins in to captiuyte, but the alhnightie LORDE hurte him, and delyuered him in to the handes of a woman, which brought him to confucion. For their mightie was not destroyed of the yonge men. It was not the sonnes of Titan that slew him, nether haue the greate giauntes sett them selues agaynst him: but Iudith the daughter of Merari with hir fayre bewtye hath discomfited him, and brought him to naught. ${ }^{\text {c }}$ For she layed awaie hir widdowes garment, and put on the apparell of gladnesse in the reioysinge of the children of 1srael. She anoynted hir face, and bounde vp hir hayre in an hooue, to begyle him. Hir slippers rauyshed his eyes, hir bewtye captyuated his mynde, ${ }^{d}$ with the swerde smote she of his neek. The Persians were astonnyed at hir stedfastnesse, and the Medes at hir boldnes. Then howled the armyes of $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ Assirians, whan my symple appeared, drye of thyrst. The sonnes of the daughters haue pearsed them thorow, and slayne them as fugityue ehildree: they peryshed in the battayll, for the very feare of the LORDE my God. Let us synge a songe of thākesgeuynge vnto the LORDE, a new songe of prayse wyl we synge ynto oure God. LORDE, LORDE, thou art a greate God, mightie in power, whom no man maye ouercome. All thy creatures shulde serue the, ${ }^{e}$ for thou spakest but the worde, a they were made: thou sente thy sprete, a they were created, and no man maye withstonde thy voyce. The mountaynes shal moue from the foundacions with the waters, the stony rockes shal melt before the like waxe. But they that feare the, shal be greate with y in all thinges. Wo vnto the people that ryse vp against my generacion, for the allmightie LORDE wyll auenge him self of them, a in the daye of iudgmet wyl he ryset them. For he shall geue fyre a wormes in to their flesh, that they maye burne and fele it for euermore.

After this it happened, that after the victory all the people came to Ierusalem, to geue prayse and thankes rnto the LORDE. And whä they were purified, they offred all their brent sacrifices and their promysed offerynges.

[^840]And Iudith offred all Holofernes weapens, and all the Iewels, that $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ people had geve her, "and the canapy that she toke from his bed, and hanged them p p vato the LORDE. The people was ioyfull, as the vse is: © this ioye by reason of the victory, with Iudith, endureth thre monethes.

So after these dayes euery man wente home agayne, and Iudith was in greate reputacion at Bethulia, and right honorably taken in all the londe of Israel. Vnto hir vertue also was chastite ioyned, so $\frac{t}{y}$ after hir huszbonde Manasses dyed, she neuer knew man all the dayes of hir life. Vpon the hye solempne dayes she wente out with greate worshipe. She dwelt in hir huszbandes house an hundreth and fyue yeare, a left hir honde mayden fre, and dyed, and was buried besyde hir huszbande in Bethulia. And all the people mourned for her seuen dayes. ${ }^{\text {tho }}$ longe as she lyued, there was none that troubled Israel, and many yeares also after hir death.

The daye wherin this victory was gotten, was solemply holden, and rekened of the lewes in the nombre of the holy dayes, and is yet greatly holden of the Iewes euer sence, vnto this daye.

In the seconde yeare of the raigne of greate Artaxerses in the first daye of $\dot{y}$ moneth Nisan, had this Mardocheus soch a dreame: He thought he herde a greate tēpest, horrible thonderclappes, erthquakes, a greate vprour in $\dot{y}$ londe: a $\frac{t}{y}$ he sawe two greate

In this ehapter is deelared, how Mardocheus vttereth the treason of the two seruauntes agaynst the kynge, and therfore doth the kynge rewarde him.

AT the same tyme dwelt Mardocheus with Bagatha and Thares the kynges chamberlaynes and porters of the palace. But whan he herde their deuyce, and had diligently considered their ymaginacions, he perceaued that they wente aboute, to laye their cruell ${ }^{\text {a }}$ handes vpon the kynge Artaxerses: and so he certified the kinge therof. Then eansed the kynge to examen $\mathfrak{y}$ two gelded with tormentes. And whan they had graunted it, they were put to death.

This the kynge caused to be put in $\dot{y}$ Cronicles for an euerlastinge remembraūce, and Mardocheus wrote up the same matter. So the kynge commaunded, that Mardocheus shulde do seruyee in the courte, and for this faithfulnesse of his, he gaue him a rewarde. But Aman the some of Amadathu the Agagite, which was holden in greate honoure and reputacion in the kynges courte, vndertoke to hurte Mardocheus a his people, because of the two chamberlaynes that were put to death.

Whan I was made lorde ouer many people, and had subdued the whole earth vnto my dominion, my mynde was not with crueltye and wronge to exalte myself by the reason of my power: but purposed with equyte allwaye and gentylnes, to coulerne those that be voder my iuriszdiccion, and wholy to set them in a peaceable life, and therby to brynge my kingdome nnto tranquylite, that men might safely go thorow on euery syde, and to renue peace agayne, which all men desyre. Now whan I axed my councelers, how these thinges might be brought to a good ende, there was one by vs, excellet in wyszdome, whose good wyll, trueth a faithfulnes hath oft bene shewed a proued (which was also $\mathfrak{y}$ pryneipall $₫$ next unto $\mathfrak{y}$ kīge) Amai by name, which certified vs, how $\frac{i}{y}$ in all lödes there was erepte in a rebellious folke, $\dot{y}$ made statutes a lawes agaynst all other people, a have allwaye despysed the proclamed commaundementes of kynges: and how that for this cause it were not to be suffred, that soch rule shulde contynue by you $\mathbb{t}$ not to be put downc. Seinge now we perceaue the same, that this people alone are contrary vnto euery man, vsynge straunge and other maner of lawes, a withstonde oure statutes and doinges, and go aboute to stablish shrewd matters, that oure kyngdome shulde neuer come to good estate and stedfastnes: Therfore haue we commaüded, that all they that are appoynted in wrytinge and shewed vnto you by Aman (which is ordened and set ouer all oure busynes, and the most pryneipall next vnto the kynge, and in maner as a father) shal with their wiues a children be destroyed and roted out with the swerde of their enemies and aduersaries: © $\dot{y}$ there shalbe no merey shewed, a no man spared. And this shalbe done ${ }^{\circ}$ xiiij. daye of the moneth called Adar) of this yeare, that they which of olde (and now also) haue euer bene rebellious, maye in one daye with violence be thrust downe in to the hell, to the intēt that after this maner, oure empyre maye have peace and tranquylite.

But Mardocheus thought vpon all the workes and noble actes of $\dot{y}$ LORDE, $\pi$ made his prayer vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE LORDE, thou valeaunt and allmightie kynge (for all thinges are in thy power, and yf thou wilt helpe and delyuer İsrael, there is no mà that can withstode ner lett the: for thou hast made heauen a earth, and what wonderous thinge so euer is nnder the heauen: thou art LORDE of all thinges, and there is no man, ${ }_{y}^{t}$ can resist the O LORDE) Thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest LORDE, that it was nether of malyce, ner presumpcion, ner for eny desyre of glory, that I wolde not bowe downe myself ner worshipe yonder proude presumptuous Aman (for I wolde haue bene cottent, and $\frac{t}{y}$ with good wyll, yf it might haue

And therfore O LORDE thou God and kinge, hane mercy vpon thy people for they ymagyn how they maye bringe vs to naught, yee their mynde and desyre is to destroye and to ouerthrowe the people, that hath euer bene thine enheritaunce of olde. A copye of the commaundement, which kinge Artaxerses caused to be proclamed in all the countrees of his domynion, for the wealth of the lewes.

THE greate kynge Artaserses, which raigneth frō India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and xxrij. londes, sendeth rnto the prynces a rulers of the same londes, soch as loue him, his frendly salutacion. There be many, that for the sondrye frendshipes and benefites which are diuersly done vnto them for their worshipe, be euer $\dot{y}$ more proude and hye mynded, and modertake not onely to hurte oure subiectes (for plenteous benefites maye they not suffre, and begynne to ymagin some thinge agaynst those that do them good, and take not onely all vnthankfulnes awaye fro men) but in pryde and presumpcion (as they that be vmmyndefull and vnthākfull for the good dedes) they go aboute to escape the indgment of God, $\frac{y}{y}$ seyth all thinges, which (iudgment) hateth $\mathbb{I}$ punysheth all wickednes. It happeneth oft also, $y^{\frac{t}{y}}$ they which be set in office by the hyer power, and wnto whom the busynes and causes of the subiectes are comytted to be handled, waxe proude, and defyle the selues with sheddynge of innocent bloude, which bryngeth them to intollerable hurte. Which also with false and disceatfull wordes and with lyenge tales, disceaue and betraye the innocent goodnes of prynces.

Now is it profitable and good, that we take hede, make search therafter, and consider, not onely what hath happened rnto rs of olde, but the shamefull, vnhonest, and noysome thinges, that the debites haue now taken in hande before oure eyes: and therby to bewarre in tyme to come, that we maye make the kyngdome quyete $\mathbb{T}$ peaceable for all men, and that we might some tyme drawe it to a chaunge: and as for f thinge that now is present before oure eyes, to withstande it, and to put it downe, after the most frendly maner.

What tyme now as Aman the sonne of Amadathu y ${ }^{\text {y }}$ Macedonyan ${ }^{d}$ (a straunger verely of the Persians bloude, and farre from oure goodnes) was come in amōge vs as an aleaunt, and had optayned the frendshipe that we

With manyfolde disceate also hath he desyred to destroye Mardocheus oure helper and preseruer, which hath done vs good in all thinges: and innocent Hester the like partaker of oure kyngdome, with all hir people. For his mynde was (whan he had take them out of the waye, and robbed vs of them) by this meanes to translate the kyngdome of the Persians vnto thē of Macedonia. But we fynde, that the Iewes (which were accused of $\dot{y}$ wicked, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they might be destroyed) are no euell doers, but vse reasonable a right lawes, and that they be the children of the most Hye lyuynge God, by whom the kyngdome of vs and oure progenitours hath bene well ordred hither to. Wherfore, as for the letters and comaundementes, that were put forth by Aman the sonne of Amadathu, ye shal do well, yf ye holde them of none effecte: for he that set them vp and inuented the, hangeth at Susis before the porte, with all his kinred, and God (which hath all thinges in his power) hath rewarded him after his deseruynge.

And von this ye shal publish and set vp the copy of this letter in all places, that the Iewes maye frely and without hinderaunce holde them selues after their owne statutes, and that they maye be helped, and that vpo ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{E}}$ xiij. daye of y xij. moneth Adar they maye be auenged of them, which in the tyme of their anguysh and trouble wolde haue oppressed thé. For the God that gouerneth all thinges, hath turned to ioye, the daye wherin y chosen people shulde haue perished.

Morouer, amoge the hye solempne dayes that ye haue, ye shall holde this daye also with all gladnesse: that now and in tyme to come, this daye maye be a remembraūce to good, for all soch as loue the prosperite of the Persians: but a remembraunce of destruccion to those that be sedicious vnto vs.

All cities and lodes that do not this, shal horribly perish and be destroyed with the swerde and fyre, and shall not onely be nomore inhabited of men, but be abhorred also of $\mathfrak{y}$ wilde beastes $\tau$ foules.

 HEN shal $\mathfrak{y}$ righteous stonde in greate stedfastnesse ${ }^{b}$ agaynst soch as haue dealt[^848]extremely with thé, a takē awaye their labours. When they se it, they shalbe rexed with horrible feare, t shal wonder at the haistynesse of $\hat{y}$ sodane health: groninge for very distresse of mynde, $\pi$ shall saye within them selues (hanynge inwarde sorow, and mournynge for very anguysh of mynde) :

These are they, whom we somtyme had in derision, a iested vpō. ${ }^{c}$ We fooles thought their life very madnesse, a their ende to be without honoure. But lo, how they are counted amonge the ehildren of God, a their porcion is amonge the sayntes. Therfore we have erred from the waye of trueth, $\dot{y}$ light of righteousnesse hath not shyned vnto vs, and the Sōne of vaderstōdinge rose not vp vpō vs. We hane weeried oure selues in $\stackrel{8}{\mathrm{y}}$ waye of wickednesse © destruceion. Tedious wayes have we gone: but as for the waye of the LORDE, we hate not knowne it.

What good hath oure pryde done vito vs? Or, what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs? ${ }^{\text {dill }}$ those thinges are passed awaye like a shadowe, $\pi$ as a messaunger rennynge before: as a shippe $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ passeth ouer the wawes of the water, which whan it is gone by, the trace therof can not be founde, ${ }^{e}$ nether $\dot{y}$ path of it in the floudes. Or as a byrde $\frac{t}{y}$ flyeth thorow $y$ ayre, a no man can se eny token where she is flowen, but only heareth the noyse of hir wynges, beatinge the light wyode, partinge the ayre thorow the vehemèce of hir goinge, $\tau$ flyeth on shakynge hir wynges, where as afterwarde no toke of hir waye can be foñde. Euen so we in like maner as soone as we were borne, beganne immediatly to drawe to oure ende: a have shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in oure owne wickednesse.

Soch wordes shal they that have synned, speake in the hell: for the hope of the vngodly is like ${ }^{f}$ a drye thistell floure (or dust) that is blowne awaye with the wynde: like as thynne scomme $\frac{t}{y}$ is seatred abrode with the storme: like as ${ }_{y}^{\circ}$ smoke which is dispersed here ct there with the wyode, a as $\frac{y}{y}$ remembraunce of a strauger ${ }^{g}{ }^{\mathrm{t}} \mathrm{y}$ tarieth for a daie, $\mathbb{\tau}$ thē departeth.

But y righteous shal lyue for euermore:

Che biii. Chapter.

WYSZDOME reacheth frō one ende to another mightely, a louigly doth she ordre all thinges. I haue loued her and laboured for her eue fro my youth vp: I dyd my diligéce to mary my self with her, soch loue had I vnto hir beutye. Who so hath $\dot{y}$ cōpany of God, comèdeth hir nobilyte, yee the LOR DE of all thinges himself loueth her. For she is $\dot{y}$ scolemastresse of $\dot{y}$ nurtoure of God, a $y$ choser out of his workes. If a man wolde desyre riches in this life, what is richer then wiszdome, ${ }^{\frac{t}{y}}$ worketh all thiges? (Thou wilt saye:) vnderstādinge worketh. What is it amōge all thinges, $y$ worketh more the wyszdome? If a man loue vertue t righteousnes, let him laboure for wyszdome, for she hath greate vertues. And why? she teacheth sobernes a prudence, righteousnes © strēgth, which are soch thinges as mé can haue nothinge more profitable in their life. Yf a mā desyre moch knowlege, she cā tell $\frac{8}{}$ thinges $\frac{\stackrel{t}{y}}{}$ are past, $\mathbb{a}$ discerne thinges for to come: she knoweth $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ sotilties of wordes, ac cā expoūde darke sentēces. She can tell of tokēs a wōderous thinges, or euer they come to passe, a the

I shal set $\hat{y}$ people in ordre, and the nacions shalbe subdued vnto me. Horrible tyrauntes shal be afrayed, whan they do but heare of me: amonge the multitude I shal be counted good, $\pi$ mightie in battayll. Whà I come home, I shal fynde rest with her: for hir coppany hath no bytternes, a hir felashipe hath no tediousnesse, but myrth $\mathbb{0}$ ioye.
c. Now whan 1 cosidered these thinges by myself, a pondered them in my hert, how $\frac{f}{f}$ to be ioyned vnto wyszdome is immortalite, a greate pleasure to haue hir frendshipe: how $\frac{t}{y}$ in the workes of hir handes are infinite riches: how that, who so kepeth company with her shalbe wyse: and that he which talketh with her, shal come to honoure: I wente aboute sekynge, to gett her vinto me. For I was a ladd of a rype wytt, and had a good understandinge.

But whan I grewe to more inderstãdinge, I came to an vndefyled body. Neuertheles whan I perceaued that I coude not kepe myself chaist, excepte God gaue it me (c ${ }^{\mathbf{y}}$ was a poynte of wyszdome also, to knowe whose gift it was) I stepte vnto the LORDE, and besought him, and with my whole hert I sayde after this maner:

WYSZDOME preserued $\mathfrak{y}$ first mā, who God made ${ }^{a}$ a father of the worlde, wha he was ereated alone, brought him out of his offence, toke him out of the moulde of $\dot{y}$ earth, $\pi$ gaue him power to rule all thinges. Whan the vmrighteous wente awaye in his wrath from this wyszdome, $\mathfrak{y}$ brotherheade perished ${ }^{b}$ thorow $y^{0}$ wrath of murthur. Agayne, whà $\hat{y}$ water ${ }^{\text {c }}$ destroyed $\hat{y}$ whole worlde, wyszdome preserned the righteous thorow a poore tre, wherof she was gouerner herself. Moroner whà wickednes had gotten $\mathrm{y}^{\mathrm{y}}$ vpperhande, so $\frac{\tau}{y}$ the nacions were puft vp with pryde, ${ }^{d}$ she knewe ${ }^{\circ}$ righteous, preserued him fautlesse into God, and layed vp sure mercy for his ehildren. ${ }^{\text {es }}$ She preserued the righteous, whan he fled from the mgodly $y$ perished, what tyme as $\dot{y}$ fyre fell downe von 23 y v . cities: Like as yet this daye the vufrutefull, waist and smokinge lōde geueth testimony of their wiekednesse: yee the ruripe and mintymely frutes that growe vpon the trees.

And for a toke of a remembraunce of the vnfaithfull sonle, there standeth a piler of salt. For all soch as regarded not wyszdome, gat not only this hurte, that they knewe not the thinges which were good, but also left behinde them vnto mé, a memoriall of their foolishnes: so $\stackrel{t}{y}$ in the thinges wherin they synned, they coude not be hydd. But as for soch as take hede vnto wyszdome, she shal delyuer them from sorowe.

Whan the righteous fled because of his brothers wrath, ${ }^{\prime}$ wyszdome led him the right waye, shewed him y kyngdome of God, gaue him knowlege of holy thinges, made him riche in his laboures, and brought to passe the thinges that he wente aboute. Therfore chastenest thou the measurably that go wroge, and warnest them, concernynge the thinges wherin they offende: thou speakest unto them (o LORDE) and exortest the to leaue their wickednes, and to put their trust in the. As for those olde dinhabiters of thy holy londe, thou mightest not awaye with them, for they commytted abhominable workes agaynst the: as wytchcraft, sorcery and Idolatry: they slew their owne children without mercy : they ate vp mens bowels, and deuoured the bloude: Yee because of soch abhominaciōs, myszbeleues $\tau$ offeringes, thou slewest the fathers of the desolate soules by the handes of oure fathers: that y londe which thou louest aboue all other, might be a dwellinge for the childrē of God.

Neuertheles thou sparedest the also (as mé) $\frac{1}{}$ sendedst $\dot{y}$ forerūners of thỵne hoost, eue hornettes to destroye the out by lytle I litle. Not $\stackrel{t}{\mathrm{y}}$ thou wast mable to subdue $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ vngodly vnto $\stackrel{\circ}{y}$ ' righteous in battayll, or with cruell beestes, or with one rough worde to destroye the together: But thy mynde was to dryue the out by lytle a litle, geuinge the time $\tau$ place to amende : knowinge well, $y$ it was an vnrighteous nacion a wicked of nature, a $\stackrel{t}{y}$ their thought might neuer be altered. For it was a cursed sede from $\dot{y}$ begynnynge, a feared no mà: Yet hast thou pardoned their synnes. For who wyl saye vnto the: why hast thou done ${ }_{y}^{t}$ ? Or who wyl stōde agaynst thy iudgmēt? Or who wil come before thy face an auēger of smighteous mé? Or who wil blame $\stackrel{\ominus}{y}$, yf $\dot{y}$ people perish, who thou hast made?"For there is none other God but thou, ${ }^{\frac{t}{4}}$ carest for all thinges: ${ }_{y}^{t}$ thou mayest declare how $\frac{\mathfrak{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ thy iudgmét is not inright. There dare nether kige, ner tyraūt in thy sight requyre accōptes of them, who thou hast destroyed.

For so moch the as thou art righteous thy self, thou ordrest all thiges righteously, a ${ }^{5}$ punishest euē hī $\stackrel{t}{y}$ hath not deserued to be punyshed, I takest him for a straüger a an alcaunt in $\hat{y}$ lode of thy power. For thy power is $\dot{y}$ beginnynge of righteousnes: and because [^857]thou art LORDE of all thinges, therfore art thou gracious vito all. Whan men thinke $\mathfrak{y}$ not to be of a full strength, thou declarest thy power: $\pi$ boldly delyuerest thou them ouer $\frac{i}{y}$ knowe $\mathfrak{y}$ not. But thou LORDE of power iudgest quyetly, and ordrest us with greate worshipe, for thou mayest do as thou wilt.

By soch workes now hast thou taught thy people, that a mã also shulde be iust and louynge : and hast made thy childré to be of a good hope: for euen when thou iudgest, thou genest rowme to amende from synnes. For in so moch as thou hast punyshed, and with soch diligence delyuered $\dot{y}$ enemies of thy seruautes, which were worthy to dye (where thorow thou gauest the tyme a place of amédement $\stackrel{t}{y}$ they might turne fro their wickednes) with how greate diligence then punyshest thou thine awne childré, vnto whose fathers thou hast sworne a made couenaūtes of good promises? So where as thou doest but chasten vs, thou punyshest oure enemies dyuerse wayes: to $\mathfrak{y}$ intēt ${ }^{t}$ whá we punysh, we shulde remēbre thy goodnesse: © whan we oure selues are punyshed, to put oure trust in thy mercy.

Wherfore where as men have lyued ignorañtly a mrighteously, thou hast punyshed the sore, eué thorow $\dot{\text { y }}$ same thinges that they ${ }^{\text {a }}$ worshipped. For they wente astraye very loge in $\dot{y}$ waye of erroure, a helde $\dot{\mathrm{y}}$ beestes (which eue their enemies despysed) for goddes, lyuynge as children of no vnderstandinge. Therfore hast thou sent a scornefull punyshment amonge them, as amonge the childrē of ignorannee. As for soch as wolde not be refourmed by those scornes a rebukes, they felt the worthy punishmēt of God. For $\dot{y}$ thinges $\frac{t}{y}$ they suffred, they bare the vnpaciétly, beinge not contēt in them but vn wyllinge. And whan they peryshed by $\stackrel{\circ}{\mathrm{y}}$ same thinges that they toke for goddes, they knowleged then, that there was but one true God, whom afore they wolde not knowe: therfore came $\dot{y}$ ende of their dampnacion vpon them.

ส $\quad$ AYNE are all men, which haue not $\hat{y}$ knowlege of God: as were they that out of the good thinges which are ${ }^{b}$ sene, knewe not him, that of himself is euerlastinge.

[^858]Nether toke they so moch regarde of the workes that are made, as to knowe, who was the craftesman of them: but some toke the fyre, some the wynde or ayre, some $\hat{y}$ course of $\hat{y}$ starres, some $\frac{f}{y}$ water, some toke Some and Moone, or the lightes of heauen which ${ }^{\text {ch}}$ rule $y$ earth, for goddes. But though they had soch pleasure in their beuty, that they thought them to haue bene goddes: yet shulde they haue knowne, how moch more fayrer he is that made them. For the maker of beuty hath ordened all these thinges. Or yf they marueled at the power and workes of thē, they shulde haue perceaued therby, ${ }_{y}^{t}$ he which made these thinges, is mightier then they.

For by the greatnesse a beutye of the creature, $y$ maker therof maye playnely be knowne. Notwithstondinge they are the lesse to be blamed, that sought God © wolde haue founde him, and yet myssed. And why? for so moch as they wēte aboute in his workes and sought after them, it is a toke, that they regarded and helde moch of his workes $\dot{y}$ are sene: howbeit they are not wholy to be excused. For yf their vaderstondinge and knowledge was so greate, $\frac{t}{y}$ they coude discerne the worlde and $\frac{y}{y}$ creatures, why dyd they not rather fynde out y LORDE therof?

But vnhappie are they, and amonge the deed is their hope, that call the God which are but the workes of mens handes: golde, syluer and the thinge, that is founde out by connynge, the similitude of beastes, or eny vayne stone that hath bene made by hande of olde. ${ }^{d} \mathrm{Or}$ as whan a carpenter cutteth downe a tre out of the wodd, and pareth of the barck of it connyngly : and so with the one parte maketh a vessell to be rsed, and dighteth meate with the residue. As for the other parte that is left, which is profitable for nothinge (for it is a croked pece of wodd and full of knobbes) he cartueth it diligently thorow his vanite, and (acordinge to the knowlege of his connynge) he geueth it some proporcion, fashioneth it after the similitude of a man, or maketh it like some beest, straketh it ouer with reed and paynteth it, and loke what foule spot is in it, he easteth some coloure vpon it. Then maketh he a conueniet tabernacle for it, setteth it in the wall and maketh it fast with yron, prouydinge so for it, lest it happé to tall: for it is well knowne, that it can not helpe it self: And why? it is but an ymage, and must of necessite be helped.

Then gocth he and offreth of his goodes ruto it for his children and for his wife: he seketh helpe at it, he axeth councell at it: he is not ashamed to speake vnto it $\frac{t}{y}$ hath no soule: for health, he maketh his peticion vnto him that is sicke: for life, he prayeth vuto him that is deed: he calleth ypon him for helpe, that is not able to helpe him self: a to sende him a good iourneye, he prayeth him that maye not go. And in all the thinges $\stackrel{t}{y}$ he taketh in hande (whether it be to optayne eny thinge or to worke) he prayeth vnto him that can do no maner of good.

AGAYNE, another mā purposinge to sayle a beginynge to take his iourney thorow y raginge see, calleth for helpe vnto a stock, $\frac{y^{2}}{y}$ is farre weaker, the $\frac{y}{y}$ tre $\frac{y}{y}$ beareth him. For as for it, coueteousnesse of moneye hath founde it out, a $\mathfrak{y}$ craftesmä made it with his comnynge. But thy prouydence ( O father) gouerneth all thinges frō $\dot{y}$ begynnynge, for thou hast made a waye in $\dot{y}$ see, "s a sure path in the myddest of $\dot{y}$ wawes: declaringe therby, $\stackrel{t}{y}$ thou hast power to helpe in all thinges, yee though a man wente to the see without shippe. Neuerthelesse, $\stackrel{t}{y} \hat{y}$ workes of thy wyszdome shulde not be vaine, thou hast caused an arke to be made: ${ }^{b}$ a therfore do men commytte their lyues to a small pece of wod passinge ouer the see in a shyppe, $\frac{5}{}$ are saued.

For in the olde tyme also what the proude giauntes perished, ${ }^{c}$ he (in who the hope was left to increase $\frac{8}{y}$ worlde) wēte in to the shippe, which was gouerned thorow thy hande, and so left sede behinde him vnto $\mathfrak{y}^{\dot{y}}$ worlde. For happie is $\dot{y}$ tre where thorow righteousnes cometh : but cursed is the ymage of wod, $\frac{t}{y}$ is made with hädes, yee both it a he $\stackrel{+}{\mathrm{y}}$ made it : He, because he made it: $\pi$ it, because it was called God, where as it is but a frayle thinge. ${ }^{d}$ For the vagodly a his vngodlynes are both like abhommable vnto God. Euen so $\dot{y}$ worke $\tau$ he $\dot{y}$ made it also shal be punyshed together. Therfore shal there a plage come vpon the ynages of the Heithen: for out of the creature of God they are become an abhominacion, a temptacion vnto the soules of men, and a snare for the fete of the vnwyse. And why? the sekinge out of ymages is the beginnynge of whordome, and the bringinge vp of them is the destruccion of life. For they were not from the begynnynge, nether shall they continue for euer. The welthy ydilnes of men hath founde them out vpon earth, therfore shal they come shortly to an ende. Whee a father mourned for his sonne $\stackrel{t}{y}$ was taken awaye fro him, he made him an ymage (in all ỳ haist) of his deed sonne : a so begãne to worshipe him as God, which was but a deed mă $\mathbb{T}$ ordened his seruauntes to offre vnto him. Thas by processe of tyme a thorow loge custome, this erroure was kepte as a lawe, t tyraūtes cōpelled mē by violēce to honoure ymages. As for those $\frac{\mathrm{t}}{\mathrm{y}}$ were so farre of, $\frac{y}{y}$ mé might not worshipe them presently, their picture was brought fro farre (like the ymage of a kynge who they wolde honoure) to the intent that with greate diligence they might worshipe him which was farre of, as though he had bene present. Agayne, the syngular connynge of the craftesman gaue the ignoraunt also a great occasio to worshipe ymages. For the workman wyllinge to do him a pleasure that sett him a worke, laboured with all his connynge to make the ymage of the best fashion. And so (thorow the beuty of the worke) the comon people was disceaued, in so moch that they toke him now for a God, which a litle afore was but honored as a man. And this was the erroure of mans life, whan men (ether for to serue their owne affeccion, or to do some pleasure vnto kinges) ascrybed vnto stones and stockes the name of God, which ought to be geuen vito no man.

Morouer, this was not ynough for them that they erred in the knowlege of God: but where as they lyued in the greate warres of ignoraunce, those many and greate plages called they peace. For ether they slewe their awne children and offred them, or dyd sacrifice in the night season, or els helde vnreasonable watches: so that they kepte nether life ner mariage cleane: but ether one slewe another to death malicionsly, or els grened his neghbonre with aduoutrie. And thus were all thinges myxte together: bloude, manslaughter, [^859]theft, dissimulacion, corrupcion, mfaithfnlnesse, sedicion, periury, disquyetinge of good men, vnthākfulnes, defylinge of sonles, chaūginge of byrth, vistedfastnesse of mariage, mysordre of aduoutrie and voclennesse. And why? the honouringe of abhominable ymages, is the cause, the begynnynge and ende of all euell. For they ${ }_{\mathrm{y}}^{\mathrm{t}}$ worshipe Idols, either they are madd whà they be mery, or prophecie lyes, or lyue rngodly, or els lightly mansweare them selues. For in so moch as their trust is in y Idols (which haue nether sole ner vnderstondinge) though they sweare falsely, yet they thinke it shal not hurte them.

Therfore commeth a greate plage vpon them, and that worthely: for they haue an euell opiniō of God, geuinge hede vnto Idols, swearinge vniustly to disceaue, and dispysinge righteousnes. For their swearinge is no vertue, but a plage of them that synne, and goeth euer with the offence of the vngodly.

Cbe rb. Cbapter.

$\mathfrak{a}$ RUT thou (O oure God) art swete, longe sufferinge and true, and in mercy ordrest thou all thinges. Though we synne, yet are we thine, for we knowe thy strength. If we synne not, then are we sure, that thou regardest vs. For to knowe the, is parfecte righteousnes: Yee to knowe thy righteousnes and power, is the rote of immortalite. As for the thinge that men haue founde out thorow theyr euell science, it hath not disceaued us: as the payntinge of the picture (an mprofitable laboure) and carued ymage, with diuerse colours, whose sight entiseth the ignoraunt: so that he honoureth and loueth the picture of a deed ymage, that hath no soule.

Neuertheles, they that loue soche euell thinges, are worthy of death: they that trust in them, they that make them, they that loue them, and they that honoure them. The potter also taketh a tempereth soft earth, laboureth it, and geueth it the fashion of a vessell, what so euer serueth for oure vse: and so of one pece of claye he maketh some cleane vessel for seruice, and some contrary. But where to euery vessell serueth, that knoweth ${ }^{\circ}$ potter himself. So with his vayne laboure he maketh a god of the same claye: this doth euen he, which a litle afore was made of earth himself, and within a litle

Notwithstandinge, he careth nut y more because he shal laboure ner because his life is shorte: but stryueth to excell goldsmythes, y syluer smythes a copper smithes, and taketh it for an honoure to make vayne thinges. For his hert is ashes, his hope is but vaine earth a his life is more vyle then claye: for so moch as he knoweth not his awne maker, that gave him his sonle to worke, and brethed in him the breth of life. They counte oure life but a pastyne, and oure conuersacion to be butt a market, and that men shulde euer be gettinge, yee and that by euell meanes. Now he $\frac{t}{y}$ of earth maketh frayle vessell and ymages, knoweth himself to offende aboue all other.

All the enemies of thy people and ${ }^{t}$ holde them in subieccion, are vnwyse, vnhappie and exceadinge proude snto their owne soules: for they iudge all the Idols of the Heithe to be goddes, ${ }^{\text {a }}$ which nether haue eyesight to se, ner noses to smell, ner eares to heare, ner fingers of handes for to grope: $\tau$ as for their fete, they are to slowe to go. For man made them, and he that hath but a borowed sprete, fashioned them. But no man can make a God like rnto him: for seinge he is but mortall himself, it is but mortall that he maketh with vnrighteous handes. He himself is better then they whom he worshippeth, for he lyued though he was mortall, but so dyd neuer they. Yee they worshippe beestes also, which are most miserable: for compare thinges that can not fele unto them, a they are worse then those. Yet is there not one of these beestes, that with his sight ca beholde eny good thinge, nether haue they geuen prayse ner thankes vito God.
